HEART failure the cause, is getting to be the most fashionable method of explaining the many, very many, sudden deaths, which readers of the daily papers are called upon to read. Scarce a day goes by without an account, and on some days more than one, of some person being found dead or dropping dead while at work. Why is there so much of this? Is there not some cause in the method of living? Cannot science point to some cause that can be done away with? Is not much of it due to the effects of narcotics, and other poisons used by people promiscuously? Does not tobacco come in for a share? Is not the telegraphic system of nerves so affected by the incessant use of cigarette, cigars and tobacco in other forms as to paralyze the organs of respiration? And of circulation? Does not the foul stuff sold over the saloon counters as beverages, adulterated until the vendor himself would not dare drink it, cut a figure in creating heart failure, and sudden death? Do not the various adulterations found in food, baking powder, prepared flour, bread, and butter color, and many other things have something to do with it? Do not the various canned goods, put up in the cheapest possible manner contain poisons enough to, where much used, create a few cases of heart failure? Are not patent medicines, advertised to cure every conceivable ailment and sold at every corner grocery store and hawked about the country by every old lady that has nothing else to do, and wants an excuse to call on her neighbors for the latest news; and often by ministers, and others, who laud their curative powers to the skies, not knowing, themselves, what they contain, nor what they are good for, responsible for many sudden and some protracted cases of illness or deaths? Does not the cold icy hand of aconite still the heart in death? Do not Belladonna, hydrocyanic acid various preparations of arsenic, mercury and other powerful drugs administered at inopportune times or in too large or often repeated doses, cut short the life of those to whom they were given with the best of motives, but in blissful ignorance of their power to do harm?

Reputation.

Newspapers have it in their power to make a man's reputation. People are prone to believe things because they seen them in the paper. They seem to forget that the paper is made by man; and, that what the man is, his paper will, in a measure, reflect. If an editor is a man given to falsifying and to deceit, his paper is apt to be filled with misleading statements, concerning those especially, with whom he is not on good terms. Some editors take advantage of their positions, to belittle, and run down, their enemies, forgetting the golden rule, they abuse others, in season, and out of season they insinuate, and by giving a glowing description of the meanness of those about whom they dare to say such things place before readers in such a manner as to deceive the unwary often, stories that they would not dare write about some people; and then, with the cunning of a fox, with which instinct such people usually are endowed, they ingeniously lead the unsuspecting reader to believe that some honest, upright, respected and respectable citizen with whom they cannot agree, is of the same kind, by mentioning him in the same way, as the wily horse trader who recommended one of his horses in very high terms, to a purchaser, and then said, "the other one is his mate." In this manner often, people with characters as pure as the purest are by the base and ignorable inuendoes and insinuations of unscrupulous men published broadcast over the country as villans, as saloon bummers, as men unfit for respectable society, and all to satisfy their own small longings. Such men are unfit for the editorial chair. Such writings ought not be allowed in the household, where the rising generation are drinking in their knowledge of the world. It gives them a wrong idea of the world, a wrong idea of life. They are led to loose confidence in mankind, and to trust none. They are made to believe that either the paper is falsifying or individuals whom they have respected all their short lives, perchance their neighbors, friends, or maybe their own fathers, are but hypocrites. This is all wrong. People who have families know the truth of these statements and if they are but made to look at them in the right light they will not tolerate such literature longer merely for the purpose of gratifying a morbid curiosity made worse each week by the repeated meals of vile repetitions concerning imaginary evils of which their friends are entirely innocent. Not every man that has a newspaper reputation for good or for evil, has a character in accord with it. His character is his own. The papers may whitewash him and try to make him appear pure in the sight of all; they may succeed for a time in giving him a good reputation, but if his character is not as his reputation sooner or later it comes out, here a little and there a little, until his reputation is no better than his character.

The papers may write him down, they may call him names; they may even lead folks to infer that he is not just as he should be until people begin to believe from the often repeated hints that something, no body really knows what, is wrong. A man's doings may be written with a pen steeped in the gall of bitterness, his reputation may be painted as black as Egypt. People may be made for a time to believe that he is hardly fit for decent society, or that he should be behind prison bars, or sunk in the depths of the bottomless pit. Yet if his character is that of a pure Christian man in time will it shine forth as does the glittering diamond found among the commoner things of earth. In years to come, maybe after he is dead and gone will his reputation come to accord with his character more nearly. And will the community in which he lived give him that place in their hearts that he deserved.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 7, 1893.

The newspaper romancers of the National Capital having become tired of straining their inventive powers in describing the result of the "battle-royal between Mr. Cleveland and the Democratic Senators," a battle which has not begun and is not likely to begin, this week started on another tack with the first chapter of a new and exciting romance entitled "dissensions in the Cabinet," which will be run as a serial in republican and sensational newspapers as long as the invention of the authors holds out, or until something new and more startling shall have been evolved from their think tanks. This first chapter opens with a spirited description of the intention of Secretaries Carlisle and Gresham to resign, which is written with all the skill which has characterized the numerous "intentions of Mr. Cleveland," written by the same authors, and it is every bit as true. Neither Secretary Carlisle nor Secretary Gresham are dissatisfied, or have any intention of retiring from the Cabinet. On the contrary they are, in common with their colleagues of the Cabinet, in perfect harmony with President Cleveland in his determination to give the country the best and most successful administration it has had since the war, and, what is more important indications of success are becoming more plentiful every day. If the Secretaries named, or any of their colleagues, were contemplating resigning, you may be sure that the republican romancers would be the last men in Washington who would be taken into their confidence. Ananias was a mere novice in the art of prevarication when compared with the correspondents of republican newspapers who try to earn their salaries by writing what their managing editors order, instead of the facts about Washington news.

No President ever appointed so many men under the age of 40 to responsible positions as Mr. Cleveland has, and his reason is apparent. He knows that the labor of carrying out his plans for the reform and purification of all branches of the public service will be enormous and that only men in the prime and vigor of life can stand it without breaking down.

Unless the Senate adopts a resolution calling for the facts, it is not probable that the people will ever know just how extravagant ex-Secretary of State Foster has been in taking his personal favorities to Paris as attaches of himself, ostensibly as necessary for a proper presentation of our case before the Behring Sea Arbitration tribunal. President Cleveland although much shocked at the facts when brought to his attention by Secretary Gresham concluded that it was a matter in which our National honor, to say nothing of personal courtesy and friendship for his immediate predecessor in the White House, was too deeply involved to be made public at a time when an international court of arbitration is sitting to decide important questions in which this country is interested. Much of the money expended by Foster will never be accounted for, as it was taken from the secret fund, always at the disposal of the Secretary of State. Although ex private secretary Halford is one of the principal beneficiaries of Foster's lavishness, no one believes that Mr Harrison either knew of or sanctioned anything that was not perfectly right and proper. Foster as Secretary of State issued the orders that placed the money at his disposal as U. S Agent.

The holders of sinecures in the Government service are all in a state of mind, as they know that quiet and careful investigations are in progress in every one of the departments, and that as fast as they are reached they will have to go.

A considerable number of important appointments have been made this week, and so far as can be learned they gave general satisfaction to democrats, particularly those in the diplomatic and consular service.

President Cleveland still retains his fondness for living in the country, and has leased a residence near the one he purchased during his first term, and he expects to have his family settled there by the first of May.

Secretary Morton requested Assistant Attorney General Colby, a republican hold-over, to assist chief clerk Mac Craig, of the Agricultural department, in investigating the charges which have been made against officials of the Weather Bureau, in order that no one could say it was to be a partisan affair. He also ordered that the investigation should be public and officially invited all reputable persons who know anything for or against the accused officials to come forward and testify. Secretary Morton's plain and straight forward way of doing business is rapidly earning him popularity.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

The running waters, the sighing winds, the lowing heards, and the Robin on yonder spray, tuneing his voice in melodious song indicates to us that Spring time is here. This is a time of year for thought and meditation. When old earth after a long and dreary winter shows itself full of life and animation. Spring is the beginning time. It was the time when Bonepart, Washington, Grant, Sherman and Lee moved their armies. It is the time when a new administration begins in this country, and the time when the preceeding one ends. And so we might go on and enumerate many other things; but one thing more we will mention in this line it is the time of year when men and boys go fishing; just now Pioneer creek from its head waters to Wright's ford is the place of rendezvous; should a stranger after night be passing along the Creek near Armstrong he would think he was meeting a torch light possession, but it would only prove to be the light of some lonely fisherman. They say fish is very plenty this spring. Does the new administration or the McKinley bill have any thing to do about it? Many of the people seem to be complaining of Rheumaties this Spring.

The Maple sap (or as some say sugar water) has been running good for a few days back. Hardly think there will be any body in Independence that will get the benefit of the sugar bounty.

The quarterly meeting held at the Independence A. C. church last Saturday and Sunday was quite largely attended on Sunday. Quite a number were present from a distance and it seemed as if they enjoyed or had a symposium together.

Henry Fogleman will go to Minneapolis in a few days to engage in painting (not cosmetic painting).

Today's rain will put seeding back a day or two.

We hear of parties enquiring after real-estate in Independence this spring. Come in and buy, this is the banner town of Hennepin county.

Died in Independence at her nephew's Zimri Willcut's, on 3rd present month, Mary Litchfield aged 77 years and some months, was buried on the following day at Elmwood cemetery, Rockford. Funeral services at the Rockford A. C. church, conducted by Elder Owen.

Wm. Budd and Otto Kertz, of Maple Plain, are engaged in business. They are importing hound pups from Mo. free of duty, now we think this is missusing the Democratic administration.

W. W. Mills and son attended church in Independence last Sunday.

Any one wishing to buy maple syrup would do well to call on Hardy, Southerland & Co.

E. K. Smith is on the sick list, also Mrs. Chas. Gould.

The Hennepin county school superintendent business is a little easy just now hope it will remain so.

MAPLE PLAIN.

J. W. Peterson has received from O. W. Jones in Minneapolis the agency for selling all kinds of farm machinery wagons, buggies, etc

Julius Hardt had the interior of his hotel painted and grained with the Minnehaha decorating composition sold by Mrs. Schaefer, 23 Central Ave., Minneapolis, who has the entire right for this state. It looks beautiful and every visitor admires the work done by Mrs. Schaefer. Any one can learn to do it in a short time. Mr. J. Hardt has bought the right for this town and keeps the liquid to be used for the decorating for sale.

Mr. C. Watson returned to Minneapolis after a stay of a couple of weeks at relatives and friends in this yicinity.

It is rumored that we will have one or two weddings in the near future.

On Thursday evening of last week a surprise party took place at the house of James Turnham. Quite a number of young and old friends were present and spent a pleasant evening.

Seeding had commenced in this neighborhood, but winter's addition has stopped it for a while.

It is said that our lumber dealer Mr. Arthur Vanderwalker has left for unknown regions.

Mr. David Cox and son, Charles, are engaged in manufacturing the genuine maple sugar and syrup and they find rapidly sale for it right at home, because every body knows it is good.

Ed. Jackson is building a new house and barn on his farm and it will soon be ready to move into.

Charles Budd had left the village and will try his luck farming on the land formerly owned by his father, W. W. Budd.

Hennepin County Schools.

It is reported that Margaret M. Cochrane, the erratic principal of Webster school, Minneapolis, and Ella Meek, the noted Hennepin county school teacher, have joined the Salvation army.

Prof. B. F. Remington, of Maple Plain, is proposed as a compromise appointee to the position of Assistant County Superintendent of schools. Prof. Remington is an excellent scholar and has taught school for many years with marked success. The commissioners say they will confirm his appointment without hesitation if Sup't Lewis sees fit to give him the place. Petitions are being circulated throughout the county, already numerously signed, asking Supt Lewis to appoint Mrs. A. S. Beede. Mrs. Beede is known to have been Lewis' second choice, but he will not now appointed her, it is said, because she is also the choice of several who have been fighting him, notwithstanding the fact that Mrs. Beede has kept her own hands off and has had nothing whatever to do in the long fight one way or the other The petitions are evidently being circulated without her knowledge or consent.

A new school house at Maple Plain will be erected this Spring. Julius Hardt has now in his possession a beautiful plan of a one-story two-room building which may be accepted by the district before work is begun on the new structure.

Miss Rhoda Pierce is giving good satisfaction in Dist. 104. Miss Pierce is the young girl who gained some enviable celebrity about a year ago by passing for a better certificate than any eyer held by Miss Ella Meek, who had taken it onto herself to inform one of the school officers that Miss Pierce was not a person of proper education to be entrusted with the management of such an advanced school. Miss Meek boasts of having taught forty-eight terms of school, and was a candidate for the nomination for superintendent last summer; but her name did not come before the convention, owing to the treachery of a friend (?) who was to propose her as a compromise in the event of his failure to receive the nomination himself.

CONRAD RICKER, a farm laborer, was found dead with his face in a pool of water at a culvert on the Wisconsin Central railway the 11th, near Waukesha, Wis. A watch was found in the vest pocket and there were no indications of foul play. It is supposed that he fell from the track while intoxicated.

WESTERN Iowa was swept by a fearful cyclone the 11th, which did great damage, particularly in Plymouth county, and was attended by loss of life in the vicinity of Akron, a little town on the Milwaukee road, which was completely wiped out of existence. The storm broke out about 5 o'clock, and in almost an instant the principal buildings in the town were scattered to the winds.

MAY wheat reached 87 cents in Chicago the 11th, under the influence of the bull clique. Among the shorts that got badly squeezed was Partridge.

NEAR Robinson, Kas., the 11th, the 14-year-old son of E. P. Polton, a wealthy merchant, was killed by lightning.

A CYCLONE passed over the western part of Kansas the 11th. Three towns, Willis, Everest and Powhatton, were laid in ruins.

A SPARK from an engine ignited the gas in the coal mine near Pont Y. Pridd, Wales, the 11th, and caused an explosion. A large number of miners were at work at the time and the explosion caused terrible havoc. Two hundred miners were caught and entombed.

A MAN named John Dryscoll was taken from a freight car in Pittsburg, in an exhausted condition the 11th. When he had been revived it was learned that he lived in Buffalo, N. Y. He had been in the car since the 5th.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The Doings of the State Law Makers at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, April 5.—The senate again had the legislative session problem under consideration. Senator Eaton moved to limit sessions to 60 days. An attempt to make it 80 days failed. Donnelly moved to make the sessions annual and a fixed salary of $400. After considerable discussion both amendments were adopted and the bill recommended to pass.

Morse's bill creating the inspector of elevators and lifts was defeated.

The following bills were passed: The bill amending the probate code; legalizing the issue of bonds; relating to elevators and warehouses; Staples' bill relating to school districts, and Anderson's bill prohibiting the adulteration of lard.

The house, as soon as it was ready for business, went into committee of the whole and in that capacity spent the whole day. Bleecker's automatic brake bill, which had been remodeled by a substitute, was recommended to pass. A long drawn fight occurred on Jacobson's elevator bill. Several amendments were offered and lost. Finally the Smith bill was substituted and favorably reported. The bill for the inspection of oils was also favorably considered.

ST. PAUL, April 6.—By consent of the governor, two bills were introduced in the senate, one relating to St. Paul sidewalks, and the other relating to the compensation of members and officers of the legislature. It fixes the price to be paid for enrolling work at 8 cents and for engrossing work at 6 cents per folio. The bills passed under suspension of the rules. The bill amending the law relating to the restraining of cattle from doing damage was passed under suspension of rules, also the bill providing punishment for engaging in trusts and combines.

The bill relating to conveyances by husband and wife was also passed under suspension also the one relating to title insurance companies. The bill requiring railroads to build elevators at certain points was lost. In the afternoon the capitol bill was taken up and fully discussed and was passed by a vote of 34 to 20.

In the house, Mr. Knutson had his seed wheat loan bill corrected and repassed. The Davis bill from the senate reducing the state militia to two regiments and repealing brigade formation was killed by adopting the report of the committee recommending indefinite postponement. The balance of the day was spent in considering the reapportionment. The bill was recommended for passage. The basis of representation is 55 senators and 117 representatives.

ST. PAUL, April 7.—In the senate McHale introduced a bill amending the probate code. The bill relating to stock certificates; conferring additional powers upon boards of education in the matter of issuance of bonds, and the bill compelling railroads to fence their tracks and erect cattle guards, were passed under suspension of the rules. Senator Morse brought up the university tax levy bill and asked that the same be placed on the calendar, but the balance of the senators did not agree with him.

In the house two bills were introduced, one for the leasing of poor farms, the others to legalize the sale of township bonds. The bill appropriating $25,000 for a fish hatchery was indefinitely postponed. The senate bill for the publication of legislative manuals was passed under suspension of rules.

Senate amendments to H. F. 491, from grain and warehouse committee, on elevators on rights of way and sidetracks and switches, were, on motion of Mr. Jacobson, concurred in and the bill repassed.

The house also concurred in the senate amendments to the joint memorial to congress on the coal combine and the memorial was repassed.

On motion of Mr. Jacobson the two terminal elevator bills were recommitted to the authors, to report a substitute and to retain the place of 551 on the calendar.

In the afternoon, when the calendar was reached, the senate bill by Peterson governing the receipt, storage and shipment of grain was put on passage and lost by 46 to 51. The vote was reconsidered and the measure passed by 58 to 49. A motion to reconsider was lost.

ST. PAUL, April 8.—In the senate a bill was introduced to amend the new capitol bill by extending the site limit from a quarter of a mile to one-half a mile and adding new provisions regarding architects and engineers. An attempt to put the bill on passage failed. After a long discussion the university bill was recommended to pass. The balance of the day was spent on the charter bill. The following senate bills have been signed: Relating to Minnesota troops in the civil war; the bill requiring street cars to be vestibuled; the sorting of railroad ties and cedar poles by boom companies; attaching Polk county to the 16th district; care of grain in cars; relating to boards of county commissioners; relating to roads, cartways and bridgeways.

In the house the only matter of importance was the introduction of the omnibus appropriation bill. It is claimed that the bill contemplates a reduction in the tax levy to 17 mills, it being 22 mills at the last session and 17 mills previous. The total amount of the appropriations as the bill goes into the legislature is $1,802,093, about $275,000 less than was called for two years ago. The amount appropriated for new buildings is $768,700.

One of the new features of the bill is the appropriation of about $25,000 annually for two years to the northern counties, which contain so many acres of unused railroad land, based for each county on the amount of land. However, if appropriations for drainage purposes are made for said counties equal or greater than their share of the $25,000, the appropriation referred to is null and void.

ST. PAUL, April 10.—The proceedings in the senate were devoid of general interest. The anti-cigarette bill was indefinitely postponed and the bill taxing sleeping cars recommended to pass. The Keller pine land investigating committee made its report. There are charges of fraud and some damaging revelations. No names are mentioned in the report but it is an open secret that several wealthy lumbermen are involved.

The forenoon session of the house was tame and nothing of importance was done, except to pass a resolution to exclude all outsiders from talking with the members at their seats or visiting while on the floor. The ladies were excepted from this rule, however.

In the afternoon session the house immediately took up the calendar and quickly disposed of all the bills until it came to the reapportionment bill, which was the last on the calendar. The balance of the session was given over to the discussion and defeat of this measure, after which the house adjourned.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

The State Flag.

For the first time in her history, Minnesota has a state flag. This result was achieved by the efforts of the women's auxiliary of the world's fair commission. To be the official insignia of the commonwealth, it was necessary that it should be accepted by the legislature. When the ladies swooped down upon that august body with their demands, the solons could do nothing else but throw up their hands, suspend other business and pass the bill. It took just four hours to get the measure into the governor's hands.

The flag was designed by Mrs. Edward H. Center, of Minneapolis. It is a handsome piece of work, ingeniously conceived and gracefully executed. Not only does it skillfully combine the national colors and the state emblems, but it is also artistically done. The ground is of white silk, and the reverse side of blue silk bordered with bullion fringe. In the center is the state seal wreathed with white moccasin flowers on a blue ground. The red ribbon of the seal bearing the motto is continued through the wreath, entwining the blossoms and floating carelessly over the lower portion of the flag. It bears in gold the dates 1819, the time of the settlement of Minnesota, and 1893. Above, also in gold, is the date 1858, the time of the admission of Minnesota to the union. Below the design in gold letters is wrought "Minnesota." Grouped around the seal are nineteen stars in the design of star points, with the North Star, significant of the North Star state, in a group of three at the top.

The choice of the number 19 is a peculiarly happy one, as Minnesota was the nineteenth state, after the original thirteen, to be admitted into the union. Many of the other designs submitted to the examining board employed forty-four stars, suggesting the number of states in the union, but the choice was not so well liked, as this had reference to a national and not a state matter, and would be subject to constant change. The use of thirty-two stars, suggesting that the state was the thirty-second one admitted to the union, star points in the design are to suggest the North Star state. The moccasin flower seems the necessary decoration, as it is the legal state flower. The arms are historic, being copied from the seal in use when the state was admitted, found in a manual of the legislature of 1891. I do not know of any other state emblem except the gopher. If that were required it could be used to replace the eagle commonly used at the top of the standard. In summing up points, I wish to emphasize the fact that if you choose for the flag a design with the moccasin flower, Minnesota will be represented by a flag that must and will be unlike any other flag that may be shown at the world's fair or at any other future time or place."

THE MINNESOTA STATE FLAG.

A Child Burglar.

Tiny Reunic, aged 10 years, was arrested at midnight in the act of breaking into a safe in the Henry Wahl store in the suburbs of Rochester. Patrolman Allen's attention was attracted by sounds of pounding in the store, and breaking open the front door he was greatly surprised to find, instead of a burglar, a young girl standing in front of the safe, holding a hammer, with which she had been attempting to break the combination.

A glance about the store revealed the fact that the girl had been operating on the cash drawer with a can opener. The child cried and begged the officer to let her go, as she had never done anything of the kind before. Patrolman Allen took the child to the home of her parents and a warrant was served. The district attorney asked that the child be held for the grand jury. Humane Agent Groot asked that she be placed in the custody of the society for the prevention of cruelty to children pending the disposition of the case by the grand jury.

His Head Gone.

There was a lively time near Sand Creek, Pine county, and John Big Foot, a Chippewa Indian, well known in those parts, was beheaded. Big Foot and a number of his tribe were gathering maple sugar, and were joined by two white men named Coppers and Andrews, both residing near Stillwater was discarded by the designer, from the fact that the thirteen original states having been admitted together, the rank of Minnesota was more fairly shown by counting it as the nineteenth after the colonial states. The standard of the flag was surmounted by a golden gopher, and tied with a gold cord and tassel. The execution of the design is entirely in needlework.

The thorough and careful work of the designer is evident, and the auxiliary may well feel proud in its results. Mrs. Center was also the artist of the model of the auxiliary and the frieze of the state building.

The flag awarded the second prize of $10 was designed by Frank B. Hickman of Anoka. It has a white ground bearing a scarlet star, representing the North Star state, with the points outlined in gold and the state seal in the center surrounded by thirty-two stars on a blue ground. A wreath of wheat includes the points of the star. At either side are the dates "1680," the time when the state was first visited by the whites, and "1858."

The third prize was awarded to Miss Ada White, of Minneapolis. It was an especially dainty and artistic piece of work, but did not meet the requirements of the flag. It has, however, been adopted by the state commission for a cover for a book on the state exhibits. The front of the flag is of blue and the lower part of red. In the upper right hand corner is the state seal in the center of a star, and on the left side the figure of an Indian maiden, beautifully painted, standing on a spray of moccasin flowers and wheat.

The designs were called for at the request of the committee in charge of the women's building. The purpose is to decorate the assembly hall with flags from all the states. Mrs. F. L. Greenleaf was chairman of the committee to secure designs, and her assistants were Mrs. A. A. White, of Moorhead, and Mrs. Edward Durant, of Stillwater. The committee arranged the details of the matter and called for designs, and in the interim between the call and the decision occupied the time in the study of the subject of flags. The profound research involved is not evident to the uninitiated, but became patent to the committee after weeks of patient research in private and public libraries. The designs came quick and fast, and when the woman's board met in St. Paul the last Tuesday in February to examine them and make the amends it was found that there were almost a hundred. The decision was not an easy one to make. The women of the board were mostly present, as the men of the state committee were not invited to take part. Mrs. Greenleaf, the chairman of the committee, was in the chair, and was thus deprived of both voice and vote in the matter.

The following is the description of the successful flag, as submitted to the board by Mrs. Center:

In looking at this design, I ask you to judge it as the frieze designs were judged, viz.: Without regard to color, as the color of the flag would seem sufficiently important to be voted upon by the board. I have looked at all the state flags. The majority of the states have no legal state flag. The choice of those remaining are about equally divided between white and blue, several states using stripes. Some states have honored the colors carried by regiments in battle, but these are exceptions. My reason for suggesting white and blue would be that, as it floats, it would be effective at any height, and, so far as I know, unlike any other state flag. The

She Fought Hard.

Amelia Shoenfelt, a domestic in the Minnesota house, at St. Cloud, was attacked by a man on the streets at 10 o'clock at night, when returning from the west side of town. The girl had a terrible conflict, her dress being badly torn, but she evidently got in some good work on her assailant by scratching him badly. Some of the man's flesh remained under her finger nails, and her hands and person were covered with blood.

News in Brief.

The first paroles of convicts under the new law have been granted. They were three in number and include Betts, the editor of the Prison Mirror. They were all conditional upon the released prisoners securing employment, and monthly reports are to be made, the same as in reformatory paroles.

Frank Beyer was arrested at Stillwater on the charge of bastardy, the complainant being Agnes Guise. He agreed to marry the girl and the case was dismissed.

W. H. Adams, a lawyer of Minneapolis, while on his way to Washington to secure an appointment as a territorial judge, left the car at Prairie du Chien, Wis., to get breakfast. Two thieves took his satchel that he left in the car seat, containing $5,000 in papers that could not be replaced. Charles Lindener, city marshal, found the satchel containing the papers hidden in a boat house. No arrests have been made.

The board of prison managers, at its regular monthly meeting, was met by a committee of the Farmers' Alliance, composed of President Donnelly, H. P. Bjorge, B. J. Hall and Robt. Eckford, who presented a proposition on the part of the alliance to sell all of the prison-made binding twine during the coming season. The proposition gave rise to a lengthy discussion, but no action was taken. At present the prison is turning out 8,000 pounds of binding twine per day.

Two men, whose names are unknown, were arrested at Duluth for the burglary of J. M. Currie's store at Hinckley. About $50 worth of the stolen jewelry was found on their persons.

Otto Wessenburg and Hans Jensen, both unmarried, were asphyxiated at Morgan. The wind blew coal gas down through the stove pipe.

An insane man unhitched a team which was standing in the streets of Aitkin and proceeded to take a free ride. The team ran away with him, breaking the wagon and harness all to pieces and throwing the man out. The wagon passed over him, fortunately not injuring him. When arrested he said he wanted some fun.

Fire destroyed Frank Bartholomew's opera house at Spring Grove, the Herald office and the Norwegian Lutheran church, and about $3,000 worth of farm machinery belonging to Mr. Ellingson.

At the annual meeting of the Anoka National bank the resignation of Senator W. D. Washburn as president and director was accepted, and Vice President C. S. Guderian was elected to succeed him.

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man. Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. ON SOME TITLE DEEDS.

Man, who builds houses, palaces and cities,
Man, who has empire over all the ocean,
Master of music, color, and of verse, is
Not worth a ha'p'ny.

Say that the coin is struck upon his birthday,
Sooner or later death will tap his shoulder;
Then where is he who schemed so very deeply?
There is the ha'p'ny.

Thus to myself, while wearily perusing
Musty old deeds in chambers in the temple,
Deeds that the title bore upon their pages
To an old mansion.

All the rich owners gathered in the churchyard,
Few just remembered, most of them forgotten;
Yet are their names here signed upon the parchment
Just as they wrote them.

Hearts full of hope of many an attorney
Must have leaped high when spinning out these lengthy Deeds, in the days when the longer the deed the Longer the bill was.

Here is a marriage settlement; how joyful
Was the fair bride who signed her maiden name there;
Husband, and wife, and children all are buried,
Long, long ago now.

Yet I can touch where lay her gentle fingers,
And I can wonder if her life was happy,
Whether her husband treated her with kindness,
Or like a husband.

Close "this indenture;" I must cease to ponder
Over the dead past—lawyers are not poets;
Work must be finished ere I can depart hence
Home to my dinner.

THE COUNTRY DETECTIVE

His Work Is Harder Than His City Brother's.

His Only Reliable Assistant Usually Is His Trusty Revolver—A Case in Which One Used His Weapon with Remarkable Effect.

"The detective business, any way you take it," said a member of the profession, recently, "is interesting and exciting, but out here in the 'wilds of West Virginia' the dangers go 'way by those met with in regular city work. The city detective has all the help and needful accessories he wants; out here he has to be the entire force himself, for when he is wandering around among these mountains looking for an escaped murderer or train wrecker he can't have an army of police officers at his beck and call. He and his revolver have to be the whole thing, and the only help he gets is what he has at the end of his weapon. It makes him self-reliant and pretty hard to get caught in a bad place, but he has a harder time than one thinks, keeping himself free. He plays a game of risky solitaire, in fact, and the worst of it is he doesn't even get into the papers like his more fortunate, but no braver, brother in the city."

"All right," said one of his listeners, as the country detective stopped to relight his cigar, "go ahead with your story. It reminds you of—"

"Wrong again, young man," returned the officer, smiling, "for it doesn't remind me of any hair-breadth escapes. Fact is, I have been lucky in not getting into any very close places, and I never did a thing that would warrant my having my picture published in the newspapers."

"I should hope not!" exclaimed the young man, fervently.

"But," went on the other, without noticing the interruption, "we had one man down in Kanawha county whose life was one of the saddest and at the same time the busiest of any man's in the state. Never mind his name; he was at the head of an agency, and died only a few months ago. He had had more exciting incidents in the course of his life than any man I ever knew, and, if it is ever written out in full, it will prove as interesting as any half-dime novel you could find. He was a tall, thin man, with the quietest ways imaginable, and, strange to say, as modest as a girl when talking of any of the many fine 'catches' he made. He had been a newspaper man long before he became a detective, and that gave him a capacity for listening instead of talking himself. He rose rapidly in the last profession he took up, and there is hardly a well-known case in the state which he wasn't connected with in some way. He always acquitted himself well, too, and showed he understood the business clear from A to Z. Perfectly fearless and as agile as a tiger, it wasn't often that he was caught unawares. But once he came near being lost, and by the grossest piece of carelessness he was ever guilty of. He had two men, as desperate as mountaineer criminals always are, in his office. They were handcuffed, but that was all, the guard having gone to get the town officials to carry them to jail. My friend was entertaining them in the meantime, and he got up to speak to the porter in the hall for not half a minute, about getting them some water which they had asked for, when he heard a movement in the room. He stepped quickly back in time to see one of the men reaching with both hands for a pistol belonging to the detective, which lay on his desk. He had his hands on it before my friend could speak, but the detective promptly threw a chair at him, knocked him down, and, jumping clear across the room in one spring, he had the weapon and was covering the other prisoner before either of them could move. He saved himself by his presence of mind that time, but he told me he wanted me to kick him if he ever left another prisoner in reach of his dangerous 'toys.'

"Five years ago he was on a famous case—a train wrecking. It was a horrible thing; two men turned a train into a switch running down the river, as they afterwards confessed, because they had a grudge against the engineer of the train. Several people were killed, among them the conductor, who lost his life trying to get a brakeman out from under a burning car—but that is another story. As I said, my friend had this case, and the way he worked it was worthy of the man. I never saw him so tireless as he was this time; he followed his men from farm to farm and town to town, working as a common laborer here, as a brakeman there, a machinist in another place, but keeping them in sight all the time. Not once in three months did they ever get over half a mile away from him, and he knew every move they made. And his reward came at last. They had crossed into Ohio and were working as harvest hands—all three of them—for he had used so many disguises they didn't know him—and one night one of them got drunk and between his tears of repentance and drunken hiccoughs he let the whole thing out. The detective pumped him carefully and got every particular and then put him to bed before his partner came home. The next day the drunk one sobered up, and the minute he came to his senses he knew he had let the thing out. He went to his partner and confessed. That evening as the detective was going home from the fields through a stretch of woods they came on him from behind and both of them went at him with rails taken from the fence. He got turned around before they had struck him more than once, but he was so dazed he couldn't get his pistol out. Then those two devils stood up and beat that poor fellow over the head like they were 'striking' for a blacksmith. They knocked him to his knees three times, but they didn't know their man. He was grit from hair to heel, and the third time he went down the pistol got out, and as they started to run he emptied all seven shots into them, every one taking effect, which was certainly remarkable, considering his condition. One of them was killed and the other was wounded in both legs. They were all three quiet when the rest of the hands came running up, but the detective came to in time to tell them who he was and what had happened. It was a fine thing for my friend in some ways, though it ruined his health, and small wonder. People got to thinking that a man that showed as much fight as he did must be of some account, and they gave him employment right and left. He told me afterwards that those seven shots he fired did him more good, gave him more satisfaction than any he had ever made before. He said that every time he heard the cartridge go and one of those scoundrels scream it made a good taste in his mouth. I could understand that, too, for I've felt it myself, in my time."

"What became of him?" asked one of the group.

"Well, he never really recovered from the terrible hammering he got on the head that time. He was never quite as steady after it, and a year or so ago his mind went. He imagined he had hundreds of cases, of all sorts and kinds, and that he was being shadowed all the time. I've known him to get up in the middle of the night and with his revolver patrol the streets in search of the men who were following him, as he thought. He used to give the newspaper men fake murders, too, and he'd get them worked up over the details, and after they had hunted for hours for particulars, they'd discover it all came from my poor old friend's troubled brain. He had to give up his business at last, and the minute the pressure was taken off he took to drinking. He died a few months ago, a raving maniac. That is only one incident, but it is enough to show you what I said—that the country detective has a hard time, take it all in all."—Everard Jack Appleton, in Detroit Free Press.

OUT OF SIGHT.

Realistic Art in Theory and Practice for the Young Mind.

Harry is a ten-year-old boy who indicates a disposition to become an artist. In this he is assiduously encouraged by his father. The lad has a "box of paints," brushes, pencils and plenty of rough paper. Harry's father is devoted to the theory of realism in art and literature, and occasionally lectures the little boy on the duty of trying to represent things just as he sees them.

"If you are always accurate, faithful, true to the fact, if you try to give in miniature a representation of what your eyes really behold, you will be always in the right way. Do you understand what I mean, Harry?" said the father, recently.

"Yes, papa, I think I do."

Not long afterward Harry invited his father to come and see his picture of a mountain. It consisted of a considerable quantity of sand and gravel shoveled around and upon the projections of a rough bowlder in the back yard.

"You have not quite caught my meaning, Harry, though you are certainly very conscientious," said the father, jocularly. "It's magnificent, but it's not art. You should not use the materials of your original in copying it. That would be to make a model. You must try to draw a picture of what you see; draw it with pencil and paper, and colors, too, if you like. Don't draw anything you don't see. I dare say that is the easiest way of telling you the sound artistic rule."

"Pigeon! I don't see any pigeon. Why, there is nothing but a straight up and down line, and two others meeting it at right angles."

"Well, papa, that's the corner of the fence. The pigeon went around the corner just when I was going to begin. You told me not to draw anything I couldn't see."—Youth's Companion.

Scotch Humor.

A Scotch paper tells of a farmer's wife who has a great deal of trouble with her servants. The other day one of them came to her to say:

"Madam, I fear I shall not be able to work much longer. I think I'm going blind."

"Why, how is that? You seem to got along pretty well with your work."

"Yes; but I can no longer see any meat on my plate at dinner."

The farmer's wife understood and the next day the servants were served with very large and very thin pieces of meat.

"How nice!" the girl exclaimed; "my sight has come back. I can see better than ever."

"How is that, Bella?"

A CO-OPERATIVE VILLAGE.

A few miles from Dunkirk, in France, there exists a village inhabited by fishermen and seafaring men where, since the year 1670, a syndicate has been in existence, says Edward Bellamy, and where as a birthright an equal share of land is conferred on each member of the community.

When Dunkirk was sold to the French by Charles II. Louis XIV. resolved on forming in the neighborhood of Dunkirk a community of French-speaking sailors, with a view of implanting the language, as also of reserving for state service a nucleus of trustworthy seamen. He accordingly appealed to his subjects, and in 1670 four families—namely, the Benards, Everats, Zoonekent and Goden, natives of Cueq in Picardy—offered their services to the king, who granted them for their own use and that of their descendants some three hundred acres of land situated at Fort Mardyck. These men entered into possession of the land on the understanding that they were bound to submit to maritime conscription and to exercise the profession of a sailor.

The land is divided into two lots, one of which is let to agriculturists, the rent being appropriated to a fund for the payment of the state taxes and for the distribution of relief to members of the community standing in need of assistance. The remaining portion of the land is allotted to the inhabitants of Fort Mardyck, each one receiving at the time of his or her marriage about half an acre. Under no circumstances may the Fort Mardyck native resign his ownership. He may secure a tenant for his share of the land, but no further transfer is permitted.

This rule, which, unlike others, is marked by no exceptions, has proved instrumental in inducing the villagers to marry early in life. Their field invariably produces more vegetables than they require for their own maintenance, and they are, therefore, enabled to derive a fair profit from the sale of the extra supply. Moreover, while her husband is away at sea, the Fort Mardyck woman does not depend for her support on his wages. She is able to subsist on the produce of the land, and when the man returns his pay is intact.

The Fort Mardyck sailor very soon manages to build his cottage, and when this is accomplished he is practically secure from want for life. Should he have been unable to save enough money for his old age he is maintained by the common fund. On visiting the village I called on the mayor of the little republic, where political squabbles are unknown, and was supplied by his magistrate with the following information:

"Our village numbers seventeen hundred inhabitants. We manage our own affairs and defray our own expenses. We built our public schools by subscriptions, and I am sure we have never cost the state a sou. We are a very healthy people here. We marry early and lead regular lives. Families of ten or twelve children are by no means rare. At this rate our population doubles in thirty years. I suppose that eventually we shall be compeled to diminish our allotments, as we are hemmed in on all sides by the neighboring villages. Besides, I am sure the state will not give us any more land.

"We have no paupers. Of course there are a few old people who are needy. But as they have their cottages and fields a small subsidy from the common fund keeps them very comfortably. You see, our people can not sell their land, and so, even if they are improvident, our rules prevent them from rushing to ruin."—Chicago Times.

THE ANGRY SEA.

Why It Is Calmed When Oil Is Poured on Its Surface.

It has long been known that oil poured upon the surface of stormy water has a wonderful effect in calming it. Many vessels have probably been saved from destruction by this simple method, and every month the United States hydrographic bureau publishes, along with its "Pilot Chart," dozens of letters from ship captains describing the results they have obtained by the use of oil in smoothing the waves of an angry sea.

The reason of this curious effect of oil upon water is, in a general sense, perfectly apparent. It depends upon the viscosity, or adhesiveness, of the oil, which causes it to act somewhat like a skin drawn over the more unstable surface of the water, so that the tendency of the latter to break into spray as it is driven by the wind is restrained. The danger to ships from a high-running sea arises from this breaking of the waves. As long as the surface of the waves is smooth and unbroken, the ship rides easily upon them.

But while the principle upon which the oil acts is thus evident enough, the real method of its action is not so apparent. This has recently been subjected to a mathematical investigation by Mr. A. B. Basset in England.

He shows that the viscosity of oil is so much greater than that of water, being in the case of olive oil more than two hundred and thirty times as great, that the water may be regarded as a frictionless liquid in comparison with the oil. The surface tension between the oil, and the air is also shown to be considerably greater than that between the oil and the water. With these data he finds that the motion will be stable, or there will be no breaking of the waves unless the latter vary in length between two certain fractions of a centimetre, namely, nine-elevenths and six-fifths.

The result would, of course, vary a little with different kinds of oil, and as a matter of fact the reports of mariners show that there is a considerable difference in the effect produced upon the waves, depending upon the sort of oil that is used. Petroleum and various kinds of fish oils have been employed. The effect is always found to be beneficial, though in varying degrees.—Youth's Companion.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Sackcloth and ashes in this queer age seems to consist of pretty brown, tan or gray costumes, set off with huge bunches of fragrant violets tied with a bow of the exact shade of the flower—or, what is still more in accordance with the season, a certain dull shade of purple, which is particulary becoming to loud penitents.—N. Y. Tribune.

—Gateau Des Pommes: Three cups water, three cups sugar, one sliced lemon. Put into a saucepan and boil until it begins to thicken, then add to it enough apples, peeled and cored, to cook without mashing. Let it boil until the apples are clear and sufficiently cooked. Pour into a mold or glass dish. It may be served with a custard or rich cream.—Detroit Free Press.

—Parkin: This is an English recipe. Melt four ounces of lard or butter, add three-fourths of a pound of molasses (about a large coffee-cupful), half an ounce of powdered ginger, the juice of a lemon and a quarter of a pound of brown sugar. Stir in a pound of oatmeal, adding other spices and candied peel if liked. Bake in shallow tins in a slow oven and turn out when cool.—Country Gentleman.

—Lemon Drops: Boil one pound of sugar, one cupful of water and one-half teaspoonful of cream of tartar until a little dipped in cold water will snap between the teeth without a suspicion of stickiness. Remove from the fire and add tartaric acid to the taste, and flavor highly with oil or extract of lemon; oil is preferable if obtainable. Drop the candy from a spoon upon buttered tins to form drops, or pour into an oiled pan and mark off in squares.—Good Housekeeping.

—Almond Forcemeat: Beat up the yolks of three eggs with a quarter of a pint of good cream, and flavor with a little nutmeg. Blanch and pound in a mortar three ounces of sweet almonds, using white of egg to moisten. Add these, with three-quarters of a pound of light breadcrumbs and three ounces of butter broken into small bits, to the egg mixture. Stir in, lastly, the whites of the eggs whisked to a solid froth, and fill either capon or turkey.—Boston Budget.

—Loaf Cake: When the bread dough is ready to mold into loaves, take out a heaping pint bowful, and work into it with the hands, first a teacupful of butter, then two cupfuls sugar, one tablespoonful cinamon, two teaspoonfuls grated nutmeg, the yolks of four eggs well beaten, half teaspoonful soda dissolved in a little milk, the whites of four eggs beaten stiff, and lastly two teacupfuls seeded and chopped raisins. These last should be rolled in flour. Place two well-greased pans, let it rise half an hour, then bake in a moderate oven.—Orange Judd Farmer.

—Apple Cake for Desert: Make a cup cake that is not rich and that is neither too sweet nor too crisp with butter. One egg is enough for it, and even this may be omitted, in which case the cake must be made somewhat stiffer with flour. Place the dough flatly in a pan that will allow it to become about an inch thick when baked, and upon it arrange in a symmetrical way divided quarters of pared apples, pressing the pieces lightly into the dough. Sprinkle the apples evenly with sugar, and, if liked, grate nutmeg or sift cinnamon or allspice lightly over them. Then bake for half an hour or until done. To be eaten hot with hard or soft pudding sauce, with sirup, or with sugar and butter.—Delineator.

SUMMER SILKS.

Pointers for Ladies About to Buy Their Lighter Gowns.

Under the head of summer silks, there are now a vast number of goods. They include the durable taffetas woven of even weft and woof, making them when of pure silk, one of the most durable goods known to manufacture. These have been little used in recent years, though they used to be abundant in checks and stripes. The India silk, which is par excellence, the first choice for a cool summer afternoon dress, has in recent years taken the place of the old-fashioned foulard. These goods are especially desirable in black. In colors, they do not bear the sun well. The lower priced goods of this kind are said to be very much adulterated. When a pound of the silk dress goods is sold for actually less than the price of the silk yarn in market, it is not reasonable to believe that the dress goods is pure. It is well to test this goods by burning the ravelings of a sample before purchasing any large amount. The great objection to adulteration is that it deteriorates the quality, and this is especially true of silk goods. The use of vegetable fibers with which silks are usually adulterated makes them tender and frail in texture. Another objection is that such goods do not dye evenly when adulterated, as it requires different dyes for silk and for vegetable fibers. The jute which we have already mentioned as an adulterant of cheap silks is a very difficult fiber to dye. Very few dye stuffs will penetrate it sufficiently to make the color fast. All this goes to show that if you want a goods of honest quality you must pay an honest price for it, a price that will offer no temptation to the manfacturer to deal in adulterated goods. Above all things, you must buy your goods of a thoroughly responsible dealer.

While upon the subject of so-called India silks, we will say that there are no figured India silks imported from the orient. The plain goods are sent from India to Lyons and dyed and printed there, and a large quantity of silks of this kind, we believe, are made there and in this country.

The surah silk in the strong, double-warped goods, as the best quality of surah is known by the trade, is one of the best and most durable of silks. The term "double warped" probably means little, except that special care and attention has been given to the manufacture. A goods where the warp is heavier than the wool is not a desirable one. Any goods should be woven with equal strength in every direction, so that it will be equally strong in all parts. The surah is a softly-draping fine goods. It can not be purchased at the price of cotton, any more than the raw material of silk can be purchased as some people seem to suppose at the price of the raw material of cotton. The cheapening of silk and the demand for show at the lowest cash price is a thing that wise people must deprecate.—Good Housekeeping.

—Only to think of it!—the Hunan province, south of the Yangste, contains probably 16,000,000 of people. It is the largest solid mass of heathenism in the world, and yet it is without one Protestant missionary.

The Argument Used

BY the makers of the second-class baking powders to induce the dealer to push them off on Royal consumers is that they cost less than Royal and afford the dealer much more profit.

But you, madam, are charged the same price for them as for the absolutely pure Royal, which is perfectly combined from the most highly refined and expensive materials. The lower cost of the others is caused by the cheap, impure materials used in them, and the haphazard way in which they are thrown together.

Do you wish to pay the price of the Royal for an inferior baking powder, made from impure goods, of 27 per cent. less strength? If you buy the other powders, insist upon having a corresponding reduction in price.

FARMING IN FOREIGN LANDS.

SHIPMENTS of sheep from Russia to France are being largely increased.

IN East Prussia a larger area of land than usual is being cultivated to sugar beets, owing to the low price of grain.

THE area sown to cotton in India for the coming crop is 500,000 acres less than a year ago, the principal shortage being in late cotton.

—We understand that Gustavus Kruger, (better known as Baron Von Kruger, has accepted a position under the management of Jim Hill, and is earning an honest penny at hard work with a bridge crew. Possibly this has something to do with the dryness of the bird up street familiarly known as the "Buzzard."

—In case our village council and saloon-keepers agree to obey the law of the state and keep the saloons shut on Sunday, there will be a lot of terribly dry citizens, judging from the number seen on warm days, like flies around the bunghole of a molasses barrel following each other in single file for the back door of several buildings where the beverage is on sale.

—Pat. McNeeley, Jr., of Woodland, was in attendance on the fair on Saturday. He says that Waverly Tribune yarn about him was all true and not, as some suspected, a kind of Tam O'Shanter tale. Pat says some one fired off a revolver. He hurried the white mare to town where he deposited his wealth and returned, to reconoitre, but could find nothing. Nobody wanted him then.

—Fair Day passed off about as usual. People were obliged to keep on their fur coats. Among buyers we noticed Drews and the irrepressible Alex Cruiksbank, from Minneapolis; Chris Hehl, of Long Lake, and others. Representatives from Independence were Vice Presidents McGary and Rader, Messrs. McCormick, Johnson and Coffin; from Greenwood, Jinkenses; from Hanover, H. Volbrecht and others; Peter Hoppe and Doctor Ames from Rockford.

—To the casual observer it looks kind of nice to see a man spin the arrows around over his pictures of horses every fair day, and see the bystanders and himself picking up and laying down the nickels, dimes or quarters every time the arrows stop. But it does look kind of foolish for men who have worked hard to earn a few dollars, to deliberately stand and pay out dime after dime until it is all gone, for a moments fun of this kind.

—Wool and Mutton, Vol. I, No. 1 is our newest exchange. This is to be a Monthly Journal in the interests of sheep raising and being printed in Minneapolis right at home, can probably tell us more about what we should do for the betterment of our flocks than most other authorities on the subject. The business manager is G. F. Wright, assistant editors J. H. Stevens, Willet M. M. Hayes and F. M. Hopkins. Every sheep raiser, however, small his flock, could probably derive at least his dollar's worth of benefit from this publication.

—Rev. Davies talked to a splendid audience on Sabbath evening on "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation." following as it did the able sermon at the Presbyterian church in the morning, it was more forcibly impressed upon those who had the pleasure of hearing both preachers. As the weather warms up and people feel more like getting out than they did during the storms of winter the churches are apt to fill with people anxious to learn how to be saved. The Mills meetings in Minneapolis stirred up those who attended and where they go they spread the influence of the efforts made there, and as he is to return soon to St. Paul to hold another series of meetings, people will, doubtless feel still more the efforts of the work. Let some one get in earnest in our own midst and they will not need Mills, Moody or any other of the many noted preachers to awaken the people.

—On Sunday Rev. Soares preached from the text, "Thy kingdom come Thy will be done as in heaven so in earth." The preacher fully sustained the reputation he has already made for himself at this place as a good, forcible sermonizer. He took the grounds that God says there is but one thing between man and salvation and that is his own stubborn will. If man's will is so stubborn that he will not go to church and will not listen to the offers made what will his will finally bring him to anyway?

—The post office appointment has not yet been made. Under the rulings of President Cleveland and Postmaster General Bissel "appointments of those who held under Mr. Cleveland's former administration will not be made except in cases where they alone are candidates and there is no opposition." As Eppel received so hearty an endorsement and appeared to be the only candidate in the field our citizens were satisfied that he would be the appointee. But when another petition was circulated for their signatures and signed by many who had already endorsed Mr. Eppel, of course it virtually asked that the rule be put in force and that Mr. E. be left out. Had not this been done the probabilities are that the appointment would have ere this been made. It now remains for our citizens to agree either to endorse Mr. E. as they already had done or to agree on another who has not held office before. Unless an agreement is reached the probabilities are that the present incumbent. Mr. Vorse will continue to discharge the duties of the office for still awhile longer.

—On Thursday morning at about 10 o'clock our citizens were shocked by the announcement that James B Dugan had shot himself. Mr. Dugan resided for a number of years in our village, was a much traveled and well read man. He was born in Ireland and came to this country while young; enlisted in the regular army; served through the Florida wars, the war with Mexico, and the war of the Rebellion; was drawing a Mexican pension. His health not being good he was despondent and sometimes said he had as well be dead. He evidently prepared for his demise very carefully. He sent his wife a few days ago, to inform us that his time of subscription was out the 8th of this month, and he wanted to stop the paper. The Irish World, which he took for about 20 years he stopped, and left a card to be sent to the Minneapolis Tribune requesting them to stop that paper. He very considerately went out side the house near the wood pile to do the deed, and must have leaned over the short gun, a 44 Ballard rifle, thereby muffling the sound, as neighbors did not hear the report of the gun, shooting himself through the heart. He left a short letter to his family saying that he was tired of this. He leaves a wife, one son, Desmond, and a married daughter, Mrs. Henry Conzet, of Greenwood, who have the sympathy of the community in this their hour of trouble.

List of Patents

Granted to Minnesota inventors this week. Reported by C. A. Snow & Co. Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, Opp. U. S. Patent Office, Washington, D. C:

J. H Chamberlin, St. Paul, sash-fastener: T. Forstner, New Ulm, drilling-machine; F. H. Heath, Minneapolis, rail-clamp; E. Wallace, Minneapolis, street-sweeper and loader.

Personals.

George Rogers, of West St. Paul, was in town last night.

O. J. Erickson has resumed his position with Erwig, the tailor.

John Tracy, and A. J. Whitaker, of Cokato, were Delano visitors yesterday.

J. R. Ames, one of Rockford's solid Democrats, was a Delano visitor, on Friday.

County Cullings.

A. P. Peterson, of Cokato, has been selected, as a delegate to attend the meeting of the National league of republican clubs, at Louisville, May 10. William E. Lee, Long Prairie; C. A. Towne, and J. E. Cooley, of Duluth, are the other members from the sixth district.

The County Commissioners met at Buffalo, April 10. Voted that when they receive notice of the completion of the Monticello bridge they visit and examine it. Tuesday, July 11 was set for hearing the school petitions which have been presented. Auctioneer's license was granted Chas. F. Merz. Road money was voted $200. to Monticello; $75, to Franklin; $25, to Rockford; $200, to South-Side; $200, to Woodland.

A meeting of the bar association of Wright county was held on Tuesday, at Buffalo for the purpose of recommending a Wright county attorney for the position of Judge of the District court to be made vacant by the resignation of Judge Lochran. J. H. Wendell and J. C. Tarbox were the aspirants for the position. We are informed that Mr. Wendell received the unanimous endorsement of the association with the exception of a single vote.

The Valley Herald in publishing a list of old settlers of that place has the following to say concerning some present Wright county men:

"Hon. J. K. Cullen, once a member of the Legislature from this county, resides at Wayerly, Wright county and is a prominent man in his section

John Dunn, our old county treasurer, has lived in Wright county many years.

H. Tanner resides in Wright County.

The following clipping from Minneapolis court record, in the Globe, may be of interest to our readers, as John was well-known in this county:

Judge Hooker meted out justice on the criminal bench yesterday morning in short order, John F. Rowan, a tough-looking though intelligent man of thirty-nine years, had nothing to say for himself. He has two indictments for forgery hanging over his head, and the sheriff of Bismarck after him on another like matter. He was given five years at hard labor. After that he will be taken to Dakota to answer for his crime there.

Emigrants

From the Minneapolis Journal we learn that one day last week there landed at that place 150 emigrants from Norway and Sweden. Among them was one little fellow dressed in old country style and who had been taught by his father, an old soldier, to sing patriotic songs, he is said to have electrified a large audience by singing, in a quaint treble voice, the old patriotic national song:

"Vart land, vart land, vart fosterland,
Ljud hogt, o dyra ord!
Ej lyfts en hojd mot himlens rand
Ej sanga en dal, ej skoljs en strand
Mer alskad an var bygd i nord
An vara faders jord."

"Ut markt"—"Bra! bra! pojka."—"yel sjungit," cried the crowd, as the little fellow paused for breath. Even though they had placed the stormy ocean between them and their native land the fires of patriotism still were unquenched. In a few days they will join their voices with those who preceded them, and with native born Americans in singing "Yankee Doodle," "Star Spangled Banner" and other songs of their new home.

To the Public.

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION, CHICAGO, March 30, 1893.—To the Public: Because of many misrepresentations and misstatements relative to Exposition management and affairs being in circulation through the press and otherwise, both in this country and abroad, and in reply to many letters of inquiry or complaint touching the same matters, it seems advisable that some official statement regarding them should be made to the public. Therefore I respectfully ask that the widest publicity be given to the following facts:

1. The Exposition will be opened in readiness for visitors May 1.

2. An abundance of drinking water, the best supplied to any great city in the world, will be provided free to all. The report that a charge would be made for drinking water probably arose from the fact that hygeia water can also be had by those who may desire it at one cent a glass.

3. Ample provisions for seating will be made without charge.

4. About 1,500 toilet rooms and closets will be located at convenient points in the buildings and about the grounds, and they will be absolutely free to the public. This is as large a number in proportion to the estimated attendance as has ever been provided in any exposition. In addition to these there will also be nearly an equal number of lavatories and toilet rooms of a costly and handsome character as exhibits, for the use of which a charge of five cents will be made.

5. The admission fee of 50 cents will entitle the visitor to see and enter all the Exposition buildings, inspect the exhibits, and, in short, to see everything within the Exposition grounds, except the Esquimau Village and the reproduction of the Colorado cliff dwellings. For these as well as for the special attractions on Midway Plaisance a small fee will be charged.

6. Imposition or extortion of any description will not be tolerated.

7. Free medical and emergency hospital service is provided on the grounds by the Exposition management.

8. The Bureau of Public Comfort will provide commodious free waiting-rooms, including spacious ladies' parlor and toilet rooms in various parts of the grounds.

H. N. HIGINBOTHAM, President.

Notice.

There will be a meeting at the City Hall, next Tuesday evening, April 18, at 7:30 p. m. for the purpose of making arrangements for the entertainment and reception of all visiting Bands on June 2nd, 1893, at the Tournament of the Wright County Band Association and the ladies are especially and earnestly invited to be present and assist in the matter, let there be a good turnout. HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

THE TOPER'S SONG.

BY JOSEPHINE POLLARD.

There's a song the toper loves to hear,
'Tis sweetest music to his ear,
At morn or noon, by day or night,
It ever gives him fresh delight;
'Tis the glug, glug, glug
Of the whiskey-jug!

He bears not though the wife may plead;
To love and duty gives no heed;
In vain the children cry for bread;
The only sound that't in his head
Is the glug, glug, glug
Of the whiskey-jug!

Once he was honest, good, and kind,
To noble, manly ways inclined;
But now to shame and honor dead,
From home and happiness he's led
By the glug, glug, glug
Of the whiskey-jug!

Deceived be this beguiling song,
On downward track he speeds along,
And soon among the lost appears,
Where mingled with the demon cheers
Is the glug, glug, glug
Of the whiskey-jug!

FROM the Scientific American we learn that Prof. George Moore has been to work on an invention known as the steam man. He has made one that can travel and pull as much as two men. He expects to have a larger one built for the World's Fair and which is to pull a band wagon containing 10 musicians. What noble soldiers these steam men would make. How they would scare the Indians.

THE Minnesota Canal company is incorporated for the purpose of building a canal from Minneapolis to Duluth. Henry Curtis Spaulding, the president of the company is said to be a New York engineer. The feasability of a canal between these two important points has long been recognized by competent men, among them Hon. B. F. Christlieb, of Long Lake, who as an engineer travelled over the ground considerably years ago.

ST. PAUL is to have one of the grandest street Industrial Parades the world ever saw sometime in June, in honor of the completion of her line of Railroad to the Pacific coast by that prince of Railroad men James J. Hill, himself a few years ago a common laboror on her streets now a much more than common loboror on her Railroads that connect her with the farthermost verge of the great west of this country. No pains will be spared to outdo everything of the kind which has ever taken place this the World's Fair year will bring together people from all over the world to witness the great spectacle and participate in celebrating the great achievement.

ONE of the principal points made by Major Baldwin last fall in his successful canvass for Congressman from the Sixth district was that we were being robbed of our pine lands and he of course claims to be in the front rank for any honor that may come from the agitation of the question. He is right after Secretary Smith to look the matter up thoroughly. How different this sounds from the arguments evolved by the Minneapolis lumberman M. C. who is said to have expressed himself as knowing that such things were being done for years. Of course, who should know, better than he. But who ever heard of him or any of his ilk trying to stop it.

CONGRESSMAN BALDWIN of the Sixth Minnesota district has the honor to represent one of the largest districts with the most varied interests perhaps of any man in Congress. And being one of the majority side of the House, he can have some influence, doubtless, for our district. The district stretches away from Delano in the heart of the Big Woods, to Duluth on the shores of Lake Superior. Here at Delano we are interested in farming, in raising stock, darying, some wool raising, in hard-wood timber, in Railroad transportation. At the Duluth end of the district people are interest in Deep water ways to the ocean, in Railroading, mining iron, copper and other minerals, in the elevator business, in pine lands; and between the two points people are interested in almost every conceivable business you can mention concequently if the gallant Congressman from the Sixth Minnesota comes home without having tread on somebody's corns, without having opposed somebody's schemes he will have done well. It remains to be seen whether in two years from now the voters will "love him for the enemies he has made." Let us trust that he will do the right thing at the right time and come out on the right side.

THE State University has decided to enlarge its course and will, hereafter, have a school of Political Science under the care of Prof. W. W. Folwell, L. L. D. English Literature, Prof. G. E. McLean, Ph. D. There will, also, be a School of Biology.

MEMORIAL SERVICES in honor of Major T. M. Newson, late Consul of the United States at Malaga, Spain, will be held at the People's Church, St. Paul, at 2 P. M. on Sunday, April 23d. The service will be under the auspices of the State Editorial Association and various other organizations with which Maj. Newson was active. —Educational Association Circular.

THE Evening Tribune in trying to tell the people that "Uncle Loren" wasn't in it with Mike Hoy at the time Lord Gordon Gordon was to be kidnapped, in Manitoba, don't help the matter much, but brings out that Mr. Fletcher was in even a worsee predicament than is generally understood, by his constituency. So bad that his friend, then Governor, Horace Austin, himself somewhat noted for his use of "swear words", hied him away to our country's capital, where he consulted with the Chief Executive of our country, then President Grant, and declared that if the United States Government did not secure Mr. Fletcher's release, he would send a force from Minnesota to accomplish it. In a few days Mr. F. came home, and ever since has been after a seat in Congress, uneil now, when his party is in a minority, it has sugered him to become a Member of that honorable body. The fact that he deems it necessary to have the people, after these many years, understand that he never sent any such telegram, is an indication, at least, that he thinks the morals of Minneapolis are improving. Perhaps he has heard of the Mills meetings.

"TIPS" are spoken off by travelers in some parts of Europe, and in Asia. And those who have journeyed through the Holy Lands and other eastern countries mention that they are frequently called upon, in fact it is the rule rather than the exception, to pay a few cents, as 'tips,' to those who render in any way service to them, even though they are already in their employ of the hotel, transportation company, or whatever. Stanley in his travels through Darkest Africa sought the good graces of the black kings and their subjects by distributing among them "tips" but in free and independent America it has been the practice to pay those persons having to do with the public enough so that they were not expected to receive gifts, nor allowed to take them, in most cases. But now comes the news that the Legislature of the great state of Minnesota has voted a sum of money as "tips" to the reporters of the various newspapers that were fortunate enough to have a representative there, though of course the reporters were paid in the regular way by those who sent them there. Did the reporters do some special favor for the Statesmen at the Capitol or why did they deserve "tips."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 14, 1893.

Senator Hoar's deep-laid scheme to secure some political capital by having a Senate committee investigate the charge of embezzlement alleged to have been commited by Senator Roach, of North Dakota, fourteen or fifteen years old, has come to grief. In fact, it is dead. It was killed by a democratic caucus of Senators, which adopted a resolution against making an investigation into the career of Senators before they become such. In the discussion in the executive session held before the caucus, as well as in the caucus democratic Senators made strong arguments against the right of the Senate to make such investigations. They held that as the authority to create a Senator rested alone with the State, so the authority to go into a Senator's private past rested alone with the State, and that the election of a man to the U. S. Senate by a State legislature was a sufficient certificate of his good character for the Senate. Had it not been for the chagrin felt by republicans at the election of a democrat to the Senate by the republican legislature of North Dakota this investigation never would have been proposed.

President Cleveland has notified a Senate committee that he will send the last nominations upon which he wishes immediate action to the Senate in a few days, and adjournment is looked for next week, unless things take a very unexpected turn. It will not be possible to reach a vote upon the cases of the appointed Senators at this season.

No one not even the republians, believes that Mr. Ady has any case at all in his claim to be legally elected to the seat held by Senator Martin, of Kansas, but the committee on Privileges and Elections reported a resolution authorizing an investigation. It is not yet certain, however, that it will be made.

The position of Assistant Treasurer of the U.S., at New York, is one of the most important, from a strictly commercial point of view, under the government. He handles more money than any other man in the country and has to give a bond of $200,000, something that comparatively few men can do. The nomination of Mr. Conrad N. Jordon, of New York, who was the U. S. Treasurer during President Cleveland's first administration, to this position gave general satisfaction, both in political and buisness circles.

The investigation of the Weather Bureau has so far been confined to the charges against the employes of stealing from the bureau, which have been more than proven by the evidence. The next charge to be taken up will be that of violating the Civil Service law by employing incompetent men at fancy salaries and promoting others for no better reason than that they were favorites of some high official or his friends.

The opposition to the confirmation of Mr. Eckles to be Comptroller of Currency was evidently confined to republican newspapers. It did not materialize in the Senate, as he was promptly confirmed this week, as he would have been last week if somebody had not started a silly story about his nomination being the result of a clerical error. The nomination was not acted upon at the first meeting of the Finance committee held after it was made because of that story, the members of the committee thinking it best to wait until the President could be seen before reporting upon it. The republican Comptroller thinks Mr. Cleveland was wise in nominating a lawyer to the position, as complicated legal questions are constantly turning up for him to decide.

Secretary Morton smiles at the criticism fired at him because he abolished the sinecure held by the late Mr. Blaine's brother. "I found," said the Secretary, "that Mr. Blaine was drawing $2,000 a year for doing nothing, or at least nothing that was of the slightest value to the goverment, and he would have had to go all the same even if he had been Mr. Cleveland's brother. That is all there is to it."

Secretary Herbert is heels over head in the making of preparations for the big Navy review to begin in Hampton Roads next week. The Secretary will during the review, be quarted upon a U. S. vessel, in order that he may enjoy seeing the shine taken off the foreign warships. The President will not go to Hampton Roads, but will meet the vessels in New York, whither they go after the programme in Hampton Roads is completed, and it may be that he will go direct from New York to Chicago, to open the World's fair before returning to Washington, but he hasn't finally decided about that.

The dismisal of republican chiefs of Divisions in the departments are becoming quite frequent, and to hear some of them kick is very amuseing. every man of them thinks they ought to have been kept in office. Fortunately the heads of the departments differ with them.

CORRESPONDENCE

ROCKFORD RECORDS.

Although the spring is very backward a number of farmers have commenced seeding.

Every one should examine the exhibit of the Rockford school, in the Post office—Drawing, compositions, etc —They speak well for the work of the school.

Mrs. G. Lucas visited Minneapolis Thursday last, where she purchased a fine Stock of Millinary for her spring trade here.

Miss Hill went to Buffalo, Thursday.

Union services were held in the Presbyterian church last Sunday, Communion was administered by Rev. Elder Stafford and Rev. H. A. Noyes. In the afternoon Rev. Mr. Noyes preached a very able sermon to the graduating class. Rev. O. M. Owen assisted in the service.

The Post Office was moved from the Irving building to the Benner block Thursday last.

Among those who went to Minneapolis the past week were, D. R. Thompson, J. Benner, C. M. Johnson, Frank Johnson, George Bugbee, D. R. Farnham George Irving, Florian Benner, Mrs. Mounts. Miss Mounts, and J. R. Ames.

A few of our citizens went to St. Paul, April 13th, in the interests of the school trouble. Those of this district who live in Hennepin county wish to be set off from this district for several reasons. But a large number of those of the district in Wright county object. We have not heard what the outcome of this meeting was, but it is the supposition that nothing was done about it.

Tuesday's and Wednesday's storm did considerable damage blowing over several small buildings through the country and washed out the street in front of the G. A. R. hall, here.

Greenwood Township held a special town meeting the 18th, and elected officers and voted on a site for a Town hall which they expect to build soon.

E. Twombly and family left this week for California. Their many friends regret their departure and join in wishing them success in their new home.

Will Guptil has moved his personal effects into Mr. Pitt's house and will abide in our midst,—Will prefers Rockford to Delano.

Mr. G Hatche's family have arrived and have moved into Mr. Mounts' house.

The graduating exercises of the second graduating class of Rockford public schools was held at the Advent church last Monday evening, the 17th. It was a very pleasant affair. Each of the eight graduates read an essay which did honor to the writers in composition and delivery:

The following are the subjects of the essays together with the name of the writer:

"Byron," by Miss. Georgia Guptil.
"Pioneer Women of the White House," Miss Florence Benner.
"Why do Foreigners come to America?" Miss M. Holland.
"How to study History." Miss Fleta Northrop.
"Evils of Immigration," Miss Florence Hardy.
"The Tariff" Mr. Florian Benner.
"Woman's Work," Miss Lillian Walker.
"The Spelling School," Miss Edith Ames.

Diplomas were presented by Mrs. A. S. Ames. This will always be remembered as a great event in the history of Rockford school.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Sugar making is good yet.

No farming done in this neighborhood yet to amount to anything, the ground seems to remain cold and wet the backward spring will put all the farmers work in a bunch.

The roads are mudy all the time and everything seems to hang fire but an end to all things, mudy roads too I suppose.

Forest Elliott will start for green pastures in Montana soon.

Many people are yet complaining of rheumatism.

The state legislature has adjourned happy thought.

The fishing and law making season is over and the people feel relieved.

The weekly New York Tribune is trying to make the people believe we do not want free comage of silver, gold must be the only standard and the Christian Hearald of New York is asing for money to save tabernacle it is tribute all the time.

Sould things grow much worse in this country religious and political, better turn the United States into a reservation then we would be looked after, would have missionaries sent us, and would be looked upon by the rest of the nations as becoming greatly enlightened when the hardy sons of toil are reduced to serfdom then the country will go by default neither saultpeter nor brimstone will save it.

LAKE MINNETONKA NEWS.

It may be that you would like to hear some news from the North side of Lake Minnetonka. We have heard so much of people going out fishing this spring that I thought I would tell you of what happened to two of my neighbors last Friday evening. Mr Ekstrom and Mr. Roose started out on the lake in a boat but darkness overtook them and they could not find their way back. and consequently had to remain out on the lake until the next morning, they have made up their minds not to go fishing any more this spring.

N. J. Moline of Independence and his best girl accompanied by the schoolma'am, were also out one evening last week trying their luck at fishing, but hearing of the tate of Ekstrom and Roose did not venture to come to lake Minnetonka but went in the opposite direction.

It is said that Shayer has not been feeling very well of late, his brother (through Adam not Cain) tried a couple of weeks ago to effect a cure but failed, he begun by giving a dose of "good encouragement" telling him he was young not forty yet, that his birthplace was on the shores of the noted Lake Minnetonka; if this don't help, the last remedy will be an ointment of the Jeffersonian Democrats.

Gustafus Johnson of Independence was congratulated by friends and relatives calling from early in the morning until late in the evening of last Sunday April 16th. The reason for this was the event of his having reached the respective age of seventy years, which is an age so seldom reached by people of these days, we wish to congratulate him with a hope that he may enjoy many more bright birthdays.

Two Are One.

John Bradford and Ella Hardt were married at the Star Hotel, Maple Plain, the home of Julius and Minnie Hardt, the bride's parents, on the 17th inst. Judge Bailey of Long Lake officiated. A goodly number of invited guests were present and the bride and groom were the recipients of many beautiful and costly presents. Mr. and Mrs. Bradford took the 8 p. m. train over the Great Northern, on the evening of their wedding day, for Ledgerwood, N. Dakota, where they will begin housekeeping at once, and where Mr. Bradford will work at his trade (carpentering) this summer. It has been the writers privilege during the past eight months to observe the daily life of these young people, at the Star Hotel, and he can say with certainty, that they will be greatly missed. They carry with them to their new home the good wishes of a multitude of people here who have known them from their childhood. The writer never heard either of them speak an unkind or an insulting word to or of any one. John is a steady, sober, industrious, pains-taking young man, of mercurial temperament, who will take good care of the rare girl who has embarked with him on the great sea of life. That they may have smooth sailing, with now and then just enough of the little "squalls" to make a long voyage interesting, is the earnest wish of an army of friends in Hennepin county.

Ella was her father's favorite daughter and the eletric light of his house hold. Her departure from the paternal home was a tearing of the heart-strings that was hard, very hard, for loved ones to bear.

A Poem for Teachers.

Boston entertainded the superintendents of the country in her very best style at their meeting in February, but the courtesy most appreciated and most delicate was the authors' lunch given by the publishers to Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes and other well known literary men to which the superintendents were invited. Dr. Holmes was truly the "Autocrat" of the occasion, and gave instead of a formal speech what was far more pleasing, the following little poem, which he declared to be an "Impromptu:"

Teachers of teachers! Yours the task,
Noblest that noble minds can ask,
To watch high up Aoma's murmurous mount,
I to guard the sacred fount,
That feeds the stream below,
To guide the hurrying flood that fills
A thousand silvery, rippling rills
In ever widening flow.

Rich is the harvest from the fields
That bounteous nature kindly yields,
But fairer growths enrich the soil
Ploughed deep by thoughts and wearied toil
In learning's broad domain.
And where the leaves, the flowers, the fruits,
Without your watering at the roots,
To fill each branching vein?

Welcome! the author's firmest friends.
Your voice, the surest Godspeed lends.
Of you the growing mind demands
The patient care, the guiding hands,
Through a ll the mists of morn,
And knowing well the future's need,
Your prescient wisdom sows the seed
To flower in years unborn.

UNDER the new South Carolina law there will be but forty-six saloons in the state. It will be quite a distance between drinks if the law is enforced.

A New York state editor the other day wrote a headline: "Alleged Treason in China," and was horrified to see it run through the paper, "Alfred Tennyson in China."

A CENSUS of the great trees of California, the "giant redwoods," reveals the fact that there are 2,675 of them left, the average diameter of the lot being thirty-three feet.

MISS CLEMENCE EVERART, aged 26 years, has passed with the highest distinction in Brussels the examination for the degree of doctor of medicine. She is Belgium's first woman doctor.

CHARLES TYLER, a New York city letter carrier, has been forty-eight years in the service, and in that time, it is estimated, walked three hundred thousand four hundred and eighty miles.

COLORADO has a law "to compel indolent and vicious husbands to provide for their families." Of course there will be no more neglected families now that this law has been enacted. How can there be?

DR. OPPEL, the great German geographer, says that one million seven hundred thousand square miles of the earth are still uninhabited or ownerless. This leaves quite a big field for real estate speculation still open.

HEREAFTER the morning papers of Turkey will appear in the afternoon so that the censors may have time to edit them properly. The sultan was displeased at the reports of the accident to his yacht; hence the new order of things.

MRS. JENNIE NORTHERN, of Princeton, Ky., failed to catch the measles when she was young and had an attack of that disease a few days ago, at the advanced age of 110 years, and died. She lived with her daughter, who is 90 years old and is now left an orphan.

ON a wager as to who could eat the more raw oysters two club men in Baltimore the other day ate eleven dozen each and were still in good working order when the "shucker" became tired out and quit furnishing the oysters. They called it a draw, but they should have called it gluttony.

NOTWITHSTANDING all that may be said against horse racing it is to be used as a civilizer. A St. Louis man intends to establish race tracks all over Mexico for the purpose of doing away with bull fighting. Horse racing in Mexico and big syndicates in Honduras! Southward the course of empire takes its way.

GEORGE SHEFFIELD, a New York inventor, says he is going to run ocean greyhounds from New York to Queenstown in three and a half days, the motive power to be a series of explosions produced by the contact of sugar, chlorate of potash and sulphuric acid. Why not mix fire and gunpowder and go across in half the time?

IN the long run there is no such tonic as the open air of spring. Any apparent feeling of languor is not a sign of debility, it is the first symptom of recovery from debility. In most sicknesses when a man begins to feel lazy, he is on the verge of recovery. The "extreme tired feeling" that comes with spring is not ill-health. It is convalescence from winter.

PETROFF NARASCHINE, one of the men implicated in the assassination of Alexander II., has just died in Siberia, after nine years of hard labor in the mines. It was never proven that Naraschine had any direct connection with the assassination. Upon his death-bed he confessed that he had been selected to throw the bomb at the emperor, but declared that he refused because of his wife and eight children who were dependent upon him for support.

MISS HOMANS, the head of the Normal School of Gymnastics in Boston, gives in a recent interview these statistics concerning the influence of athletics upon dress: "Two years ago," she says, "out of a class of thirty-seven, there were but two of the young women at the end of the school year who continued to wear corsets, and no one continued to wear French heels. Last year, out of a class of seventy-one, seven-eighths gave up wearing corsets."

THERE is a man by the name of Peyton living in New Jersey who claims the title of Father of Centennials. It is said that the suffering public owes to him the original suggestion of all the centennials beneath which it has groaned, from Bunker Hill in 1875 to the world's fair now impending over Chicago. And now this insatiate wretch is concocting an international celebration of the birth of Christ to be held at Jerusalem in 1900. It is too much. Let some friend and lover of humanity quietly and unobtrusively strangle the centennial fiend before it is too late.

LUCKY persons who walk abroad now with their eyes open may chance to light upon an embryo oak. The acorn will be found split in three at the point, and within one may see the swelled kernel, pink with life and just ready to sprout. If carried home and placed in damp earth, so that the openings of the shell may be visible, the kernel will put forth its little shoot, and the infancy of the oak may be watched. The unfolding of the young oak is of marvelous interest, and a patient man may think it worth while to set out the tiny tree and see it well started on its way to giant oakhood.

FROM Bangor to New Orleans and from New York to San Francisco the press has begun a campaign against filth, that the country may be spared a visitation of cholera if there be virtue in the accepted preventive measures, the first and most important of which is cleanliness. The severe winter just passed left the streets and alleys of every city in a deplorable condition and with the spring thaws the death rate has increased everywhere, due solely to disease germs liberated from accumulated filth. Let the crusade be kept up until this country has had such a house-cleaning as never before.

A 1,200-pound steam hammer was used to break the pipe in pieces which would permit easy handling. The men had been at work about an hour, when suddenly a terrific explosion was heard. MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

The Doings of the State Law Makers at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, April 12.—In the senate a bill was introduced amending the law relating to the adulteration of lard which was passed under suspension of rules. Another bill relating to the election of representatives from the Forty-third district was presented and referred to committee. The bill providing for the compensation of bailiffs, was passed under suspension of the rules. Guderion's drainage bill, which was a special order, was passed.

Senator March moved to place H. F. 554 on its final passage. The motion prevailed and the bill was passed under suspension of the rules. This is Wyman's bill permitting the redemption of a portion of land sold for delinquent taxes by the payment of a proportionate amount of the taxes.

In the afternoon the anti-scalper bill was taken up and finally recommended for passage.

In the house the corruption investigating committee, of which Messrs. Wilson, F. M., and Wacek, respectively, were chairmen, was remodeled—the one to investigate Mr. Markham was, at his appeal to the house, continued, and its powers enlarged to include all charges as to the logs and lumber bill, and the other committee discharged.

The house concurred in the senate amendment to the University tax levy bill and repassed the bill, which now goes to the governor for his signature.

The capitol supplemental bill was received from the senate. Mr. Greer moved to put the bill on general orders. Lost. Referred to committee on public buildings.

The charter bill was taken up and considered.

ST. PAUL, April 13.—In the senate a bill was introduced providing for payment of wolf bounties, which was passed under suspension. The oil inspection bill, providing for fees of the oil inspector, was taken up and after discussion was passed. Gov. Nelson announced his veto of S. F. 467, an act to provide for the election of officers of certain educational institutions. The balance of the day was spent in consideration of the general appropriation bill.

In the house an attempt to put the supplementary bill on the calendar failed. It took its place on general orders. The following bills were passed: Relating to mortgages and other conveyances; relating to domestic animals; weights and measures; claim and delivery of personal property; repeal of law relating to protection of pharmacy; lost or mislaid bills; extra bailiffs in courts, and the general appropriation bill. The rest of the day was spent in committee.

ST. PAUL, April 15.—Senator Leavitt introduced a bill amending the law for the assessment of property escaping wholly or partially taxation, appropriating $5,000 to meet the expenses contemplated in the act. Passed under suspension of the rules. The report of the coal combine investigating committee was adopted. The appropriation bill was taken up, considered and passed. Amendments were made, and by knocking out section 11, lopped off $26,400, but made several increases. Among these latter were $12,500 to defray the expenses of condemnation proceedings in the acquisition of the Weyerhauser tract of land in Itasca state park, the prairie fire appropriation of $3,000 and additional clerk hire for the governor and auditor amounting to $450. The senate additions amount to $15,950, the reductions to $26,400, or a net reduction of $10,450.

As soon as the house met it went into committee of the whole and advanced and killed some 80 bills. Leavitt's constitutional amendment for the taxation of inheritances was recommended for passage; also the bill extending the school age of children to four years as to the distribution of funds. By consent, Mr. Turrell introduced the bill for the tax levy, which was passed. When the calendar was reached the following bills were passed: Opening the Red river; managing state reformatory; election of street commissioners in villages; extra bailiffs in courts; defining what constitutes a newspaper; to prevent mixing of grain. Jacobson's bill for weighing and inspection of grain was lost.

ST. PAUL, April 16.—The senate resolution urging congress to adopt a national anthem was consigned to the table. Senator Mott introduced a bill appropriating $45,000 for building roads and bridges in the various counties of the state. An attempt to pass under suspension failed. The terminal railway charges bill was defeated by lack of one vote. In the afternoon it was reconsidered and again failed. The anti-scalper bill was reached and a call of the senate found all but two senators present. Some bitter speeches were made against the measure, but it passed by a vote of 31 to 11. Other bills passed were; Relating to veterinarians and surgeons; relating to the labor bureau; to legalize the acts of supervisors of townships. Brown's grain elevator bill was defeated.

The house concurred in the senate resolution to turn over to the attorney general the Rhodes letter book. The senate bills providing for an inheritance tax on legacies and the one increasing the supreme court reporter's salary to $3,500 were passed. In the afternoon the calendar was reached and the following bills passed: Wolf bounties; supplementary capitol bill; bonds of independent school districts. The bill compelling fencing of railroads was lost, also the bill reducing the rate of interest. The conference report on the general appropriation bill was agreed to and the bill repassed.

The evening session was devoted to consideration of the pine land report.

ST. PAUL, April 17.—The legislative day of the 17th extended into the 18th, the senate adjourning at 2:45 a. m. and the house at 3 a. m. At the morning session of the senate a number of bills were introduced and passed. One provides for the appointment of a committee to continue the investigation of the pine land sales. The bill defining a legal newspaper, better known as the Dunn bill, was passed under suspension of the rules. The two bills wiping out the grain inspection system and abolishing the railroad commission both failed. Among the bills passed were the following: Fixing a standard of weights and measures of agricultural products; punish frauds in the sale of goods and merchandise; Chesley's drainage bill; making railway tickets good either way; requiring personal notice of the expiration of the time for the redemption of property sold for delinquent taxes; the game and fish bill; compelling restaurants and hotels to notify of the use of oleomargarine.

The bill to permit counties to vote on a proposition to aid railroads was defeated. The bill was designed to aid the Duluth, Messaba & Northern railroad.

Peterson's bill relating to management to the grain and elevator business was lost, also the Cairns election bill; the Ives bill giving electric light and water power companies the right of eminent domain was passed. The were a large number of minor bills passed.

During the closing hours of the session the house became a regular pandemonium in the fight over the railroad fencing bill, which was finally defeated. The house passed the insane bill, and then went on with the call whereby each member was allowed to call up one bill. At night the Asbury hospital bill was found to be missing, and Mr. Wyman secured the consent of the governor to the introduction of another—and it was sent up and passed. It was the last bill introduced during the session, and it was numbered 902. Then the anti-pool room bill, the Minneapolis municipal court bill, the woman suffrage bill and the Davis bill to wipe the brigade formation of the militia off the face of the earth were successively killed. The Winston election bill was passed, and so was the Duluth elevator bill.

The Dunn resolution authorizing the governor to commence prosecution in matter of pine lands in Mille Lacs county was passed.

PLAYS AND ACTORS.

THE bills of a theatrical troupe that is storming its way through the mining camps of the Rocky mountains announce that "the ladies and gentlemen of this company are of the highest social position."

THE musicians at the Paris opera struck recently and declined to play "Die Walkure." They alleged weariness as an excuse, but it is assumed a "patriotic" aversion to German opera made them tired.

IN a recent performance of "Cymbeline" at a New York theater one of the adjuncts of the bedchamber scene was a brand new French clock with a bronze figure on the top—a "property" slightly out of place in a play that illustrated history some centuries before clocks were invented.

GEORGE W. HOWARD, the comedian, who was for a long time in the cast of "Adonis," playing the part of the old miller, but has since become blind, was subject for several years to deafness. At times he would be unable to hear his cue, but the audience never knew of this, because he watched the lips of the actor with whom he was speaking.

LEGISLATIVE NOTES.

The pine land investigating committee made its report to the senate. It says:

The results of its investigation will be a source of astonishment to the senate and to the people of the whole state. It is not too much to say that no committee ever appointed by any legislative body in this country has, for the length of time it has been able to give to the subject, exhumed such a mass of startling evidence. This evidence establishes, in the judgment of your committee, the conviction that the state of Minnesota has been robbed of millions of dollars worth of its property during the past fifteen years, and that the most gigantic frauds have been practiced upon the school fund. We find the laws for the collection of taxes in a vast area of the state made a farce and a laughing stock.

The evidence before your committee shows that in many, if not a majority of cases, the state received but a little over one-quarter of the amount justly its due. This great fraud is accomplished by false returns of the amount of timber cut and by low prices put upon the same, as is abundantly shown by the evidence before the committee.

According to the testimony of one witness section 36, town 56, range 24, school section, the scaler for the attorney general returned only about 450,000 feet of timber, while the witness found by actual scaling that it had produced about 870,000 feet of timber, and the school fund was out the difference, or about $1,000 on this section alone.

On section 36, township 133, range 34, there were 600,000 feet of pine and 400,000 feet of oak, and one witness testified that he would have been willing to have given $3,000 for the section, but the records of the state auditors office show that the state received but $176, which was for the oak, nothing showing that anything was paid for the pine. On section 16, township 54, range 25, it appeared that the state received less than $2,000, while 1,500,000 feet of logs were cut from the section. It is estimated that the school fund lost over $2,500 on this section. It was sold 12 or 13 years ago.

Other evidence would make it appear that a certain lumberman, whose name is in the possession of the committee, cut 30,000 feet of timber from 40 acres of internal improvement land, for which the state never received a dollar. Section 36, township 42, range 26, according to the testimony, was bought by a lumber company at $2 per thousand upon a fraudulent estimate that it contained only 250,000 feet while it really contained nearly 5,000,000 feet, worth $3 per thousand.

According to expert testimony the value of the timber on section 16, township 133, range 33, was $7,525, while the state received simply a credit of $307.14, the amount never having been paid. Three of the forties in this section have been sold as agricultural land.

Your committee would also report that the evidence before them shows that the surveyor-general of logs and lumber for the Second district employed as one of his deputies a certain party whose duty it was to scale on the river bank in 1891 the amount of pine cut by J. T. Welsh, on the Willow river, to sell to the Akely Lumber company. A very small amount of the whole of the logs hauled was reported to him as being hauled from a school section, to-wit: Section sixteen (16), township one hundred and forty-two (142), range twenty-five (25), and the rest from land owned by private parties; but the witness learned from the teamsters who hauled the logs that the whole of them were being taken from the said school section. When the surveyor-general visited the place, the witness told him that he had learned that the school land was being robbed of its timber.

It appears from the testimony of the deputy that he kept a record of the amount of timber so taken; and that while but 359,230 feet were ostensibly taken from the school land the amount really taken therefrom was 3,305,960 feet. The witness notified the state auditor of the facts, and the clerk of the land department afterward sent for him and said to him that he had rescaled the land and found his statements correct, and that he had collected $8,000 from the lumber company for pine so taken; and he paid said witness $100 as a present from the state for his valuable information.

The books in the auditor's office were found to be inextricably mixed up, but the figures for the two sections mixed up, according to evidence of witness, leave a balance of $1,738 which was paid to the land commissioner and not the state. A draft for $100 on the man who cut the logs would corroborate the present of $100. The committee then states that for years back the state auditor's books are badly confused. In regard to the state officers the report says:

"We will not go so far as to say that the state officers were a direct party to these frauds and shared in the plunder, although some of the witnesses have so testified, but we can certainly hold them responsible for great neglect of duty; nor do these wrongs seem to have been confined to any one year or any one state officer. They extend back as far as our investigation has penetrated."

The report of the committee on pine land sale says: "Your committee is fully convinced, and the evidence conclusively shows, that the pine timber was well worth $4 per thousand feet, and would easily have brought that amount had it been offered at public sale, as provided by law." The committee then quotes the law, declares that it has not been complied with and that the pretended sale is illegal and void, and if permitted to stand the state school fund will suffer a loss of at least $11,000.

A queer matter came before the legislature recently. It is nothing less than a resolution requesting the Minnesota legislature to petition congress to make a song entitled "In God We Trust" the national anthem. The song was composed by Mr. Chapple, a musician of St. Paul, and inasmuch as its title is the same as the motto on the silver dollar, it is expected to appeal to every heart.

Mr. Turrell, in presenting the bill for the tax levy for the next two years, made the statement that the sum levied was $1,100,000 for each of the coming two years, 1894-5, the rate for which was 1.7 mills, which was a reduction of 5-10 mill over the levy of two years ago. The statement was enthusiastically applauded.

* * *

On motion of Senator Donnelly, the sergeant-at-arms of the house was directed to turn over Mr. Rhodes' letter book to the attorney general to be used in evidence in the prosecution of the coal combine.

When the house reached the Red river drainage it was passed with only five negative votes.

Governor Nelson sent to the senate a veto of Senate File 387, the bill changing the methods of the election of members of the state board of health. He made numerous objections to the bill. It changes the terms of office from four to seven years and is somewhat vague as to how long the present incumbent shall serve. Another objection is that no governor can appoint more than two members and yet his administration is responsible for the acts of the board. The provisions divesting the secretary of his salary was also objected to. The matter was referred to committee on sanitary affairs.

The senate had an exceedingly warm time over the general appropriation bill, and the scene shifted half a dozen times upon the various propositions submitted. Section 11 furnished the grounds for the greatest fight, and the discussion thereon had a good deal of Markham bill aftermath in it. This is the section that provides for reimbursing counties for untaxed railroad lands. It was stricken out of the bill after an almost unparalleled parliamentary squabble. As the bill came into the senate it provided appropriations aggregating a little over $1,800,000.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Robbed the Post Office.

The postoffice at Alexandria was entered by two masked men and the cash from the money order and stamp departments, to the amount of about $200, was taken. The registered packages, about six or seven of them, and the money received from box rent, to the amount of nearly $100, were overlooked. The burglars discussed the question of taking the stamps, but thought they would be hampered with them. There were nearly $700 worth. Entrance was gained through the back door. The deputy postmaster, Robert Brough, sleeps in the postoffice, and was awakened by the rustle of rubber coats and a punch with a revolver with a command to "wake up, pard, and open this safe." He found two men standing over him with revolvers and others watching outside. He tried to gain time by missing the combination three times, hoping the bus would come, but they gave him one minute to open or be slugged with a jimmy. After securing the swag they marched Brough out of doors to give them a chance to escape. The sheriff was notified at once and began the search.

John Lampman, an expert hunter, took their trail, and after following them through the woods and across fields, he finally located them in a small lodging house in the outskirts of Sauk Center. Securing assistance, he arrested them, finding $164 in cash and six revolvers, one of which has been identified as the one taken from the postoffice.

Sudden Death.

Adolph Anderson, of Clarissa, Todd county, a patient of the Fergus Falls State Hospital for the Insane, died while the attendants were placing him in a restraining sheet. Anderson, who was a married man about 45 years of age, was committed in February. He has been very violent and had to be kept in a restraining sheet a large portion of the time. The attendants were putting him into the sheet when he expired in their hands. Supt. Welch at once notified Coroner Duncan and requested that he hold an inquest and post mortem examination, so that the public would be fully satisfied as to the cause of his death. A post mortem examination was held and the attendants exonerated. The death was from natural causes.

The Capitol Commissioners.

Gov. Nelson selected the members of the new capitol commission and the nominations were confirmed by the senate. The commissioners are as follows: First district, H. W. Lamberton, of Winona county; Second district, James McHench, of Martin county; Third district, George A. Du Toit, of Carver county; Fourth district, Canning Seabury, of Ramsey county; Fifth district, John De Laittre, of Hennepin county; Sixth district, C. H. Graves, of St. Louis county; Seventh district, T. H. Barrett, of Grant county. Of the commission Lamberton and Du Toit are Democrats; Barrett Populist, and McHench, Seabury, Graves and DeLaittre, Republicans.

Indian Murder.

Indians who, with their wives, had camped on the Red lake road, near Fosston, had an altercation, during which one ripped the other open with a butcher knife, from the effects of which he died shortly afterwards. There was another Indian in the tepee at the time of the time of the killing, a brother of the one who it is supposed did the stabbing, but he claims to have been asleep at the time it was done and not to have done it. The wife of the murdered one says that she was outside the tepee at the time it was done.

A Narrow Escape.

During a recent storm the house of Frank Williams, near Crookston, was struck by lightning and the inmates had a very narrow escape. The lightning came down the chimney, splitting it in two parts, then divided and ran down the stovepipe onto the kitchen stove, around which the family sat. Shattering this into pieces, it went out through a bedroom without injuring any of the family although all felt stunned by it.

Didn't Work.

Mrs. Charles Heiman endeavored to commit suicide at the St. Paul hotel in Stillwater by taking chloroform and carbolic acid, which she purchased in a drug stors. She came from West Superior to see her husband, who is a clerk in L. Albenberg's store. Some trouble occurred between them and she tried to kill herself. A stomach pump was used and she will probably recover.

News in Brief.

Geo. Wyman, a young lad, was killed by the electric cars in Minneapolis. He was riding a spirited pony when the cars came along and the animal became frightened and backed on the track. The motorman could not stop and the boy and pony were thrown under the wheels. The pony was killed outright and the boy died soon afterward.

In reply to inquiries received from county superintendents as to the best text books to be adopted under the new law, State Superintendent Kiehle states that he must withhold a personal judgment. The law contemplates that school districts and their advisers, the county superintendents, shall make the selections. A circular of instruction will soon be issued.

At a meeting of the creditors of Crocker, Fiske & Co., of Minneapolis, arrangements were made whereby an assignment will probably be avoided.

Tom Lewis, who slew McCaffrey, a saloon keeper, at La Prairie last summer, has been arrested in Illinois.

C. E. Rogers of Minneapolis took $500 home with him at night. He was nervous regarding burglars and upon retiring placed a revolver under his pillow. In the middle of the night he was awakened and discovered some one in the room. He fired a shot and a scream followed. It was his wife who had got up to fix the window. She was shot in the neck but the wound is not fatal.

The retail grocery firm, Simon Clark & Co., the largest of its kind in Duluth, have assigned. The full amount of liabilities yet unknown.

Julia Orcutt of Redwood Falls sues to secure a divorce from Geo. Orcutt, claiming cruel and inhuman treatment and adultery. The plaintiff is 78 years old, and her husband 75. She asks for alimony.

E. H. Howard filed suit against Drs. W. H. Magie and S. H. Boyer, of Duluth, for $5,000 damages for alleged malpractice in setting the bones of a fractured limb. Defendants are prominent physicians.

GAMING IN THE MIDDLE AGES.

Chess Was the Forbidden Game of That Time.

Gambling was the curse of the noble, as it has always been the curse of every class trained to win and to desire, but with scant outlet for its energies. The knights in winter gambled pretty nearly all day. We remember, says the Contemporary Review, how the servitor of Milun, entering a castle in the morning, finds in the great hall two knights playing chess, so absorbed that they do not see him * * * "When Easter comes," say the knights to Milun, "we will recommence our tournaments," but until Easter there is no rival to their games of chance except the eternal game of love.

Chess was the baccarat, the poker of the middle ages. In vain the king forbade it in 1369, in 1393, and both before and after, with every game of hazard. But who was to enter the snowed-up country castles to tell tales of knights and ladies playing the forbidden game? The women were almost as bad as the men. "Never play chess, save for love," says the Knight de la Tour to his daughters, "ne soyez jamais grant jouaresses de tables." And he proceeds to tell them melancholy tales of land, of money, and of women's honor spent over the too enticing board. But, alas, good knight, the days are ill to pass in winter time!

Sufferings of Siberian Exiles.

A recent incident related in Russian correspondence indicates that the hardships of Siberian exiles are by no means over when their sentences expire. A little girl of ten recently appeared before the governor of Yaroslav, M. Friede, with a petition in her hand asking help for her starving self alone. Her father, it was learned, had been an official, and for some offense or suspicion of offense was sent to Siberia. When his term expired he was told to get home as best he might. His wife was ill and he was penniless. He wheeled her in a barrow all the way from Siberia to Yaroslav, the journey occupying many months, and the little girl trudged on foot beside the barrow, begging alms on the road. Arrived at Yaroslav the wife was so sick they could go no further. The father could obtain no work, and was asked to sell his little girl into an infamous servitude. As a last resort the unfortunate man sent her to the governor. The governor could do nothing, but the townspeople heard of the case and a subscription was opened for the sufferers.

Swellings in the Neck.

Grateful for Permanent Cure.

"I cannot praise Hood's Sarsaparilla enough. For twelve years I have been troubled with scrofula and swelling of the glands in the neck. I consulted several physicians and took many medicines. My neck was also operated upon at the Mount Sinai Hospital, but this did not give me any permanent improvement. One day I read in a paper about Hood's Sarsaparilla, and on trying a bottle I found it was doing me good, so I took two bottles more. The swelling has entirely disappeared, and I am as healthy as anyone in the city. Anyone who should see my picture ten years ago and now, would notice marked improvement." "German Syrup"

I must say a word as to the efficacy of German Syrup. I have used it in my family for Bronchitis, the result of Colds, with most excellent success. I have taken it myself for Throat Troubles, and have derived good results therefrom. I therefore recommend it to my neighbors as an excellent remedy in such cases. James T. Durette, Earlysville, Va. Beware of dealers who offer you "something just as good." Always insist on having Boschee's German Syrup.

CATARRH IN CHILDREN

For over two years my little girl's life was made miserable by a case of Catarrh. The discharge from the nose was large, constant and very offensive. Her eyes became inflamed, the lids swollen and very painful. After trying various remedies, I gave her S. S. S. The first bottle seemed to aggravate the disease, but the symptoms soon abated, and in a short time she was cured.

The New Bread.

The favor with which the new bread, made with Royal Baking Powder instead of yeast, has been received by our best housekeepers and most expert breadmakers, is really wonderful. "It saves all the hard and tedious work of kneading and moulding," writes one. "Less than an hour from the dry flour to the most perfect loaf of bread I ever saw," writes another. "Fresh bread every day," says another, "and that the lightest, finest and most wholesome, is something to live for." "We relish the bread better than the old kind;" "it is ahead of any yeast bread I ever baked;" "the bread was whiter and softer." "Best of all," writes an enthusiastic housewife; "we can eat the Royal unfermented bread when freshly baked, or even when warm, with perfect impunity. It is actually an anti-dyspeptic."

"This bread has a 'nutty' taste, that is peculiarly pleasing," writes still another. This is owing to the fact that the active gas-producing principle of the Royal is derived from the pure grape acid.

The great value of this bread arises from the fact that in it are preserved all the most nutritive elements of the flour, some of which are decomposed and destroyed by the action of yeast. The loss of these properties is what makes fresh yeast bread unwholesome. The use of the Royal Baking Powder instead of yeast is found to make a finer, lighter bread, devoid of all dyspeptic qualities. The same gas—carbonic—is produced as where yeast is used, but it is evolved from the baking powder itself and not from the flour. Thereby the bread is made more wholesome and actually anti-dyspeptic. The greater convenience where a batch of the finest bread can be made and baked in less than an hour with no danger of a sour or heavy loaf, must be appreciated by everyone.

The receipt for making this bread is herewith given, and housekeepers will do well to cut it out and preserve it.

To make one loaf: One quart flour, 1 teaspoonful salt, half a teaspoonful sugar, 2 heaping teaspoonfuls Royal Baking Powder, half medium-sized cold boiled potato, and water. Sift together thoroughly flour, salt, sugar, and baking powder; rub in the potato; add sufficient water to mix smoothly and rapidly into a stiff batter, about as soft as for pound cake; about a pint of water to a quart of flour will be required—more or less according to the brand and quality of the flour used. Do not make a stiff dough, like yeast bread. Pour the batter into a greased pan, 4½x8 inches, and 4 inches deep, filling about half full. The loaf will rise to fill the pan when baked. Bake in very hot oven 45 minutes, placing paper over first 15 minutes baking, to prevent crusting too soon on top. Bake at once. Don't mix with milk.

Perfect success requires the most careful observance of all these details.

The author of the receipt emphasizes the statement that Royal Baking Powder only can be used because it is the only powder in which the ingredients are prepared so as to give that continuous action necessary to raise the larger bread loaf.

To every reader who will write the result of her bread making from this receipt to the Royal Baking Powder Co., 106 Wall street, New York, that company announce that they will send in return, free, a copy of a most practical and useful cook book, containing one thousand receipts for all kinds of baking, cooking, etc. Mention this paper

THE YEARS.

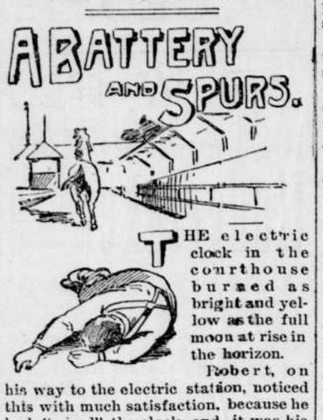
Oh, the first years, fairy-nursed years, when the happy, childish eyes
She but the blossoms underfoot, the waving boughs o'erhead,
The dew upon the meadow grass, the splendor of the skies,
The apples ripe for gathering, the rose tree blushing red!

O, the bright years, the diligent years, when the earth seems fairy fraught,
When wandering songs and perfumes fill the enchanted air,
And following rainbow visions, still pursued and still uncaught,
We see the flying shape of love about us everywhere.

O, the long years, and the strong years, when the tide of life brims high
And bears us rushing onward with a fierce, impetuous thrill,
And in desperate, drowning efforts the crowded days go by,
And we strengthen half-unknowing to the manly heart and will.

O, the fleet years are the sweet years, when the sunrise shadows kind
Flit lightly on before us as we pass along our way,
But the rest years are the best years, when the shadows fall behind
As we press on toward the sunset and the perfect end of day.

—Susan Coolidge, in Boston Traveller.



THE electric clock in the courthouse burned as bright and yellow as the full moon at rise in the horizon. Robert, on his way to the electric station, noticed this with much satisfaction, because he had "wired" the clock, and it was his first piece of independent wiring.

A short, thick-set young man hurried after him, and overtook him.

"Halloo, Rob, is that you?" he called out. "Hold on a minute."

"What is it?" asked Robert, stopping.

"Do you want a job that'll bring you a five or ten extra?"

"Yes, I guess so; what is it?" questioned Robert.

"I'm to ride Longshanks at the Appleton races, and I'm bound to come in winner, if it takes a 'lectric battery to do it —"

"A what!" exclaimed Robert.

"Hu-sh," cried the young man, in a low voice; "Jim Flanders used one at the Stanford derby, and it brought him in O K every time."

"I don't understand," said Robert.

"Well, you see these, don't you?" and the young man held up a bright new pair of spurs, "and this," and he drew a small battery from his pocket, "these are to be connected up together, so's the battery will send the 'leetricity down into the spurs, then when the spurs hits against the horse he's put right on to his best speed in a hurry."

"Oh, yes," said Robert, "but that kind of work isn't in my line."

"Why not?" asked the young man; "'tain't no harm, not a bit. If there was there'd be a rule 'gainst it, but there ain't."

"Are you sure?" said Robert.

The young man nodded emphatically.

"And it doesn't harm the horse?" Robert persisted.

"No more than it does to get a little wink of 'lectricity through you."

"Hum!" Robert reflected, with his eye upon the gold piece, which the young man displayed between his thumb and finger. It was ten dollars, and put with the ten he had saved would buy him the silver watch he had looked at in Harper's second-hand jewelry shop.

"All right," he said at last, "I'll fix up your spurs; come round to the station, Johnson."

"You allus was the fellow for me," said Johnson, following Robert at no slow pace.

They turned into a narrow back street to the electric station, and hurried up the stairs to the workshops, hung with a fine assortment of tools, and coils of insulated wire.

"This is my wire," Robert explained, drawing out a few yards from a waste heap in the corner; "the manager said I could have it for an experiment I was making yesterday; now let me get the measure from your pocket to your heel."

The measure taken there was a snip, snip, a quick twisting of the wire with the pincers, and the spurs and the battery were connected.

"Well, that is a neat job!" said Johnson. "Here's your money; put it out of the way, the boss is coming."

"But you said it wasn't any harm," demurred Robert, "if it's that sort of work keep your money. I don't want it."

"It is a good bit to pay for ten minutes' work like this; believe I will keep it," and dropping it back into his pocket Johnson hurried away without attracting the boss' attention.

That night Robert did not rest well. The spurs kept clanking in his dreams, Johnson's gold piece seemed staring at him with a face the size of the electric clock's, and he awakened repeatedly with a shock as acute as if from Johnson's battery.

Dressing early the next morning he went round to the livery stable, where he asked for Johnson.

"He went last night to the Appleton races. He's to ride Longshanks, yer know."

Robert "knew." He clutched a ten-dollar gold piece in his pocket, and hurried to the electric station.

It was only half-past six. The manager seldom reached there before eight.

Robert dusted the chairs and desk four times apiece, carboned the big incandescent lamp at the main entrance, and put new plugs into three lamps that were blown. He had forgotten his breakfast, and his little brother came to tell him it was waiting for him.

"Tell mother to never mind. I'll be home after awhile, Josie," and he began sorting out a box of fresh electric supplies just in.

At last the manager came. Robert hastened to meet him.

"Mr. Tinker," he said, "may I have the morning off? I want to go to Appleton."

"To Appleton?" repeated the manager.

"Yes, sir," answered Robert.

"It isn't the races?"

"Oh, no sir; they're in the afternoon. I want to see some one before the races."

The manager looked at his favorite wirer sharply. Robert's honest eyes were troubled and his cheeks flushed.

"All right, my lad. You have never asked for a holiday before. Take the whole day," and the manager turned to his desk.

"A half day is plenty, sir. I'll be back by one o'clock. Thank you," and Robert, hat in hand, was already on his way to the railroad station.

It was but fifteen minutes' ride to Appleton. Robert was just in time to catch the first train, filled with a merry-go-lucky crowd, already on their way to the races.

Robert in the corner by the stove, dodged out the car door as soon as "Appleton" was called, and, outstripping the other passengers, reached the trotting park first.

A man came toward him, swinging his cane, as if he were a person in authority.

"'Tain't open yet," he said to Robert.

"I only want to see James Johnson a moment; is he here?"

"He's over there," and the man pointed with his thumb to a row of stall-sheds.

Robert ran in the direction indicated, to find Johnson grooming Longshanks till his bay coat shone like damask.

"He's a beauty, ain't he?" was Johnson's salutation, showing no surprise at Robert's appearance. "Come after your gold ten?"

"No," said Robert, "but I've brought you another if you'll give up that electric spur business."

Johnson whistled, then broke into a laugh.

"Got to think it's wrong, have you?" he said, at length.

"Yes," replied Robert, "I do. I think it's cheating."

"Well, I'll tell you what I'll do," said Johnson, "since your conscience is so tender. I'll ride him round the track for a try of the 'lectric spurs, then I'll come right back, and you may unhitch the battery for all and good, and hand me the ten."

A relieved expression spread over Robert's face. What was his only gold piece, what was a silver watch, what, indeed, was anything to a clear conscience?

Johnson had already mounted, and clutching the bridle was off in a flash on bareback Longshanks.

Robert waited, and several others gathered to watch Johnson's preliminary dash, as they considered it.

High-mettled Longshanks, in perfect condition and fresh from the stall, flung his hoofs in the gayest spirits.

"It's well to take the edge off," said some one, as suddenly the horse broke his gait, and reared and plunged, as if stepping on needles.

It was the touch of the electric spurs he felt. Springing forward he came to so sharp a halt that Johnson was flung head first upon the turf.

Longshanks dashed on again, far around the smooth, rolled track, but Johnson did not stir.

Robert ran quickly toward him, while others hastened to catch the valuable horse before he had spent all his speed in his mad course round the race track.

"Are you hurt?" asked Robert, in a tremble, as he bent over Johnson.

"Yes, some," he answered, like one collecting his senses after a stunning blow. "Get the battery away quick before they find it."

In an instant Robert's nimble fingers had abstracted it, and snipping the wire that held it to the spur he plunged both wire and battery into his own pocket.

A surgeon hastened toward them. Robert pushed the promised gold piece into Johnson's pocket, then stood one side to make way for the surgeon.

"Poor fellow, he's off in a swoon," said the surgeon, having him lifted to a stretcher, "but he'll pull through."

* * * * * * *

It was a month later when Johnson, his arm still in splints, entered the electric station.

"I'm going to set up a fruit-stall on the corner, Rob," he said. "Horse-riding hasn't brought me no good, and, Rob—"

"Yes?"

"They've just made a rule 'gainst connecting up spurs with 'lectric batteries. Glad they can't say I used one, like they do of Jim Flanders;" here he cast a sidelong glance at Robert, "and Rob."

"Yes."

"Here's the two tens I found in my pocket after my throw, and the other I oughter have given you, as I promised, the evening you rigged up the spurs. Don't say nothing, there's nothing to be said. I'd be proud to see you with that watch Harper was a-telling me you wanted, so don't say nothing," and he laid the gold pieces near Robert.

An Intermission for Business.

A mother tells the following story on her two young children. At the time she was not at home, and the nurse, in order to insure a peaceful retirement of the tots, allowed them to take a small lunch to their room. They knelt down, as is their nightly custom, and all was still, as became the solemnity of the occasion, when one of the curly heads was raised and a startling announcement was made:

"Mr. Lord, please 'scuse me a minute; Kit's takin' a bite of my pickle.'

After a short but decisive engagement devotions were resumed.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—To Boil Ham: Wash the ham thoroughly and put it in a kettle of cold water. A large ham requires at least five hours' steady boiling, filling the kettle with other hot water as it boils down. When done take the kettle off and let it stand an hour. When nearly cold take out the ham and remove the skin. Cover with cracker-crumbs and put in the oven for half an hour, or until the crumbs are slightly brown—Detroit Free Press.

—Floating Island: One quart milk, four eggs, whites and yolks beaten separately, four tablespoonfuls of sugar, two tablespoonfuls extract of vanilla, one-half cup of currant jelly; heat milk to scalding, but not boiling; beat the yolks, stir them into the sugar, and pour upon them gradually, mixing well, a cup of hot milk; return to saucepan and boil until it begins to thicken; when cool, flavor and pour into a glass dish; heap upon the top meringue of whites whipped until you can cut it, into which you have beaten the jelly a teaspoonful at a time.—Boston Budget.

—Sweet Omelet: For each person take one egg, two teaspoonfuls of white sugar and one teaspoonful of flour. Flavor with extract of orange, vanilla or nutmeg. Beat the yolks, sugar and flour together, then beat the whites to a stiff froth, stir all lightly and quickly together and pour at once into a hot, well buttered omelet pan. When nearly done, set the pan carefully into the oven until the omelet is browned. Slip upon a plate covered with a napkin, spread with raspberry jam or other preserved fruit, fold one half over the other, cover with another napkin and serve at once.—Home.

—Pot Roast of Beef: Some of the cheaper pieces of beef will answer for this dish, such as the rump, or upper part of the round. Place it in a flat-bottomed kettle and cook slowly until it is browned on all sides; then add a pint or more of water, keep closely covered and cook until the meat is very tender. If the water boils off, add but little at a time, so that only enough liquor is left for the gravy. Remove the fat if more than desired, and thicken the remainder. Season to taste, and serve with the meat. A poor piece of meat cooked as above may be made very palatable.—Orange Judd Farmer.

—Baron of Hare: This German dish is a way of using a hare when the family is small. Use only the back and thighs, removing the thin skin from the back and leaving the kidneys in the loins; rub the meat over with moist sugar and let it stand for several hours, then put it in a deep dish with a gill of vinegar, a minced onion and a bay leaf, letting it remain for forty-eight hours, during which time it must be frequently turned and basted. Drained and lard it in neat rows; brown it quickly in a frying pan, and put it in a stew-pan with the liquor or marinade in which it has stood for two days, and salt and pepper also the gravy or butter in which it was browned. Cover closely and let it steam until tender, basting meanwhile several times. Transfer to a hot dish, add the juice of a lemon and a spoonful of currant jelly to the gravy; thicken, strain and send to table in a sauce tureen.—American Agriculturist.

—Apple Scollop: Bake six large sour apples, take out all their pulp while hot, and add half a coffee-cupful of sugar, a tablespoonful of butter, half a cupful of fine bread or cracker crumbs, and a heaping tablespoonful of corn-starch well mixed with the sugar. Season with a heaping teaspoonful of cinnamon or half a teaspoonful of grated nutmeg. Beat the mixture until light, and place it in a jelly-mould or an earthenware bowl that has been wet with cold water. When the preparation is cold, turn it out upon a baking dish wet with a beaten egg, and dredged with fine crumbs, and bake for from twenty-five to thirty minutes, according to the heat of the oven. Then slip it out upon a hot platter, and serve with a hard sauce flavored like the scollop, or with cream and sugar. Whipped cream also makes a fine sauce for this dainty desert.—Delineator.

SPRING GOWNS AND JACKETS.

The Crinoline Advances and the Blazer Holds Its Own.

The latest indications are that spring coats will not exceed or even equal the length of the average coat of the past winter. These have, in most cases, been what is called "three-quarter length" and have reached nearly if not quite to the knees.

The spring coats can more properly be called jackets, but in other respects they will retain many of the features of the exceedingly becoming winter styles. A green cloth coat, for example, has the same pointed colonial cuffs which have become familiar this year and it still keeps the eminently desirable little cape of plaited velvet, the color in this case being heliotrope. Another new jacket is a modification of the old blazer, for instead of meeting at the bust, one side is extended into a point which fastens under the collar.

As for spring gowns, the skirt waxes fuller and stiffer with every passing week. Skirts now range from four to six yards in width.

A really charming afternoon gown is of blue whipcord. The skirt is fully six yards in width, and is trimmed with three longitudinal rows of dark brown serpentine braid, with an edge of bead passementerie. The round waist is buttoned at one side by three large buttons, and has a wide rolling collar over bretelles trimmed like the skirt. The sleeves are decidedly new, being very full and gathered some distance above the wrist into a drooping cuff trimmed with the braid and passementerie.

Cream Biscuits.

The secret of biscuit-making is precision and dispatch. Laggards and lazy people are not successful biscuit-makers. The best cooks always say that they simply throw their biscuits together, and certainly they are not long about it. The cause of success is that biscuits begin to bake before the effervescent qualities of the powder or soda are exhausted. They are live biscuits, and are as light and puffy as beaten eggs. The best biscuits are rather small. The very large ones are not likely to be quite so light. They should be baked in a rather quick oven, and, to be perfect, are a yellowish brown. They must be thoroughly done through, or they are the most unpalatable and unwholesome articles of the bread kind.—N. Y. Ledger.

What one Grocer says:

—"I hire clerks who can sell the goods that I tell them to sell—and of course I tell them to sell the goods on which I make the most money. If they can't do it, I won't have them. That's what I hire them for."

This is an actual fact related by a grocer to our salesman—and it's a common fact; we have it daily. So, you see, when they tell you that some worthless or dangerous washing-powder is "the same as" or "as good as" Pearline, that's because it pays a larger profit. Too large, altogether, if clerks can be hired on purpose to make people take things they don't want and know nothing of, instead of a tried and proved article like Pearline. If your grocer sends you what you do not order, be honest—send it back. 391

SPURGEON WROTE

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man. Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.

Yours heartily,
(Rev.) C. H. SPURGEON,
"Westwood," Beulah Hill, England.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR can now be obtained from his own depot, 4 Wooster St., New York.

DELANO DIARY

—If you want brick go to John Coolen's.

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

—John Dahlgren has built a little house on Jos. VanEman's farm and with his family is residing there now.

—Ennis N. Brandon has moved his family to Royalton, Minnesota, where he will engage in the drive-well business.

—Allen Jenkins and daughter Jane of Greenwood, accompanied Mrs. Marr, to Delano on her way to Hancock, on Monday morning.

—At the Monday evening meeting of the village council Valentine Eppel was chosen Assessor and Irvine C. Stewart, Street Commissioner.

—Mr. Vorse continues to draw the salary from this Democratic administration, for keeping the Post Office. Maybe he is turning Mugwump.

--Thomas Lanway has exchanged his 40 acre farm for Ennis Brandon's residence, in Delano, and will occupy his new-purchased home soon.

--On account of the storm and deep snow the St Peter school took a vacation today. There was a very slim attendance at the Public school also.

—Rev. Soares preached on Sunday at the Presbyterian church, from the text "Give us this day our daily bread" found in St. Matthew chap. VI. ver. II.

—Quite a number of children are sick this week with various ailments. Don't allow the little ones too much liberty with to little clothing yet awhile.

—Roscoe Sturman entertained 17 of his little friends at his birthday party on Saturday, when he was 9 years old. He did not forget that the printers like cake.

—F. F. Chancellor purchased in Minneapolis, last week a fine span of bay mares for $350. He has been offered $400, it he will sell them this fall to take to the Wood's.

—Rev. Davies conducted two funeral services in town on Saturday, that of J. B. Dugan, and another for a little child of Edward Sjostet's, of Minneapolis, whose mother was buried here a few weeks ago.

—Rev. Wright informs us that Rev. Soares will continue to fill the appointment in the Presbyterian church at this place until the second Sunday in May, at which time the regular supply Rev. S. S. Hilscher, of Chicago, will take charge of the work.

—April 28, one week from today is set apart for Arbor day. The schools are expected to plant trees on that day with appropriate exercises for impressing upon the young minds the necessity for preserving our forests, and of, like the trees growing daily, in knowledge.

—John Lohmiller is around lamenting the calamity which struck his beer business. He says he didn't sell a barrel yesterday; thinks he is loosing about 50 dollars per day all on account of the deep snow. Perhaps there will be a lot of sober men throughout the country who are not always sober, when it don't snow.

—Hon. John Boylan was seen in town on Wedneiday morning on his way home from the legislature. His Patent Medicine bill he says was hung up with a couple of hundred others which were not reached, will be ready for a good start two years from now. It was a snowy day and John looked like a man out of a job.

--If our Village council will now hire a civil engineer to again establish grades in our Village, (the plat having been so much disregarded as to almost be useless) it is altogether likely some good work will be done where it is most needed this season. If the Street Commissioner will pay some attention to a few holes on most of the roads leading into town, near the village limits he will materially aid the traveling public.

—On Wednesday some of the largest snowflakes we ever saw came down in rapid succession, melting about as fast as they struck the ground.

LATER,—Now it is Friday, and still the storm rages, snow has been falling ever since the above was written. It has come down faster than it melted until now there is more than a foot deep of it on the ground. The wind in fitful gusts piles it up along fences and around other objects that may come in its way as it travels along. Old Boreas seems loth to give up his reign this time. Farmers who had begun to sow their wheat fear that the season will be late, and the harvest small. Never mind if it is late, you can't help it, even tariff laws are of no avail, and could not prohibit a single inch of the beautiful snow from landing on our shores, be ready when the first fine day appears and do your seeding as quickly as possible. We are promised a seedtime and a harvest and it is our business to be ready when they come.

—If you need lime, call on John Coolen. 27.

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

--Haunsman & Kohler promise us a new add for the consideration of the public, next week.

—On Monday the funeral services of Mrs. Gula, an aged lady who died on Friday, on the west side, were held at the Catholic Church.

—Gus Anderson is preparing to put a foundation under his house. He says he thinks the way to raise it will be to place some Norwegian "fisk" under it.

—J. F. Powers is preparing his residence on South Third street for the reception of himself and wife who expect, in the near future, to occupy it:

He must have tired of Jericho,
Tarrying for that beard to grow.

—Mrs. Hellen Bain has purchased the little residence formerly occupied by her mother on the land recentey sold to Joe Leudasher, and had it moved near her own residence where she expects to have a home for her brother David.

--Charles L. Belt was born in Miami county, Ind., April 14, 1861, came when but 4 years of age, with his parents, to Woodland, Wright county, Minnesota, where his father, S. W. Belt, still lives. Charley attended the common schools of his neighborhood in Wright and Carver counties; grew to manhood's estate; married Miss Johnson, of Independence; has two living children, and one dead, all girls. He has resided in Delano for the past four years, where he has been and is known as an industrious, punctual, and painstaking man. His reputation for honesty is, among Delano people, almost proverbial. He has been a lifelong, and active Democrat, taking an interest in caucuses, and two years ago was a delegate from Franklin, to the Democratic County Convention, at Buffalo. He is as deserving of party recognition as any Democrat among us, and if Valentine Eppel, the First choice of the patrons of the Delano Post Office, is to be ruled out of the race because he held it before Charles L. Belt would make a good, punctual, obliging honest, reliable man and if an election is to be held Charley has the qualifications necessary and is not cumbered with any of the objections against which so many rulings have been made. He is naturally quite modest and not inclined to shove himself before the people, but will, if given the position try his best to satisfy all. As the appointment should soon be made and for some reason seems to hang fire we would suggest that an election held by Democratic voters would soon settle as to who is the choice of those interested.

A Card of Thanks.

We sincerely thank our many kind friends who showed us sympathy, and rendered us assistance on the occasion of our great affliction, the death of our loved one.

MRS. SUSAN DUGAN AND FAMILY.

County Cullings.

The Post Offices in Wright county seem to be mostly in the hands of the Republicans yet. Considerable feeling has been worked up in several of the villages among aspirants and their friends. Owing to the rulings of the President and Post-Master General several who served with credit to themselves and satisfaction to the patrons of the offices, under Mr. Cleveland's former administration mill not receive appointments now, from the present outlook.

Through the kindness of Rev. J. R. Davies who attended and took part in the Minneapolis District Methodist Ministerial Convention, at Ruffalo, on the 17th inst., we are able to say that: P. E. Stafford, was present and conducted the meetings. Rev. F. O. Holman delivered from the 23d Psalm a splendid sermon, on the special providence of God. The advertised programme with the exception of one number, which was accounted for by telegram was carried out. The papers were all good, and, if we may judge by the amount of discussion, timely. All report a pleasant and profitable time.

Among Our Exchanges.

Tally one for Representative Craig, who has succeeded as far as the House is concerned, in getting Sherburne county detached from Wright under the new senatorial district apportionment.—Sherburne County Star-News,

Yesterday a number of leading dealers were asked if they were out of school books and had stopped buying them. As a rule the reply was that while they had a few on hand they were getting in no new ones, fearing to have them left on hand after the free text book law should go into effect. Times.

The Elks demonstrated yesterday that a procession can be formed of 200 men which can parade for a dozen or more blocks without anyone in line having a cigar in his mouth. If this example is followed society parades will not so often asume the appearance of a gang of country boys following a circus procession.—Times.

We believe the proper way to settle the female suffrage question is to submit it to a vote of the women themselves not to a vote of the other sex. If women want to vote it is there right to say whether the law shall be changed to make them voters. The LEADER is very much of the opinion that female suffrage would be a step towards better government.—Hutchinson Leader.

Elected A Postmaster.

Special Dispatch to the Times.

WASECA, April 14.—The democrats of this city held an election yesterday to determine their choice for postmaster, and the result of the ballot is as follows: D. Mc Laughlin, 6; J. Madden 6; M. H Helms, 12; D. E. Priest, 2; T Madden. 1 and Thomas Bohen, who is not nor has been a candidate, received 53 votes; H. Murphy, 2; Robert Prichel, 4.

A Billion Dollars.

A billion dollars seems a great deal of money to a certain class of politicians and they weep over its expenditure by the Goverment; but this is what the liquor traffic costs this country every year, and the people got nothing of real value in return. Stop the traffic and turn the billion dollars loose upon the legitimate industries of the country and it would abolish two thirds of the taxes, poverty, and crime of the community.—The National Temperance Advocate.

Where "Doctors Disagree."

When one tells you to put toads, lizards, snakes, ect., in bottles filled with alcohol so as to preserve the flesh from dissolving and keep flesh for a term of years, another tells you to put alcohol in your stomach where a good meal of fresh meat has gone, for the purpose of dissolving it and "aiding digestion." The man who takes alcohol to help to digest his food must first throw off the alcohol before his stomach can commence the operation.—The National Temperance Advocate.

SONG OF THE SOLON'S WIFE.

Yes, the legislature's over and I own I'm mighty g'ad.
For the ninety days of absence makes a womern kinder sad.
When a hhsband's gone, M'randy, and the wife is left alone;
There are thoughts that ha'nt her slumber, make her lie awake and groan
So I'm feeling pretty tickled with that handsome sealskin sacque,
But I feel a heap sight better since
Your
Pa's
Got Back,

Ninety days in any city haint no good for any man
Who is used to country quiet, and believe I never can
That your pa has been as careful as he told us he would be
When we drove down to the station and he went from you and me;
For these statesmen from the city sometimes strike a crooked track,
And I'm feeling more contented since
Your
Pa's
Got Back.

They go down to get together and to make a lot of laws;
But I think they stay for other things less innocent, because
I've been reading all the papers from the city and they say
That the legislature's sessions have been held from day to day,
But of news of what was done at night there seems to be a lack,
And I'm not one-half as worried since
Your
Pa's
Got Back.

There's so much that's mean and wicked in the cities nowadays
That your pa would find some trouble keeping out of Satan's ways
For he's always that goodnatured that he never could say "No,"
And if some temptation offered he'd be almost sure to go;
So he's safer in the wheatfield from the danger of attack
And my mind is resting easy since
Your
Pa's
Got Back.

To the Public.

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION, CHICAGO, March 30, 1893.--To the Public: Because of many misrepresentations and misstatements relative to Exposition management and affairs being in circulation through the press and otherwise, both in this country and abroad, and in reply to many letters of inquiry or complaint touching the same matters, it seems advisable that some official statement regarding them should be made to the public. Therefore I respectfully ask that the widest publicity be given to the following facts:

1. The Exposition will be opened in readiness for visitors May 1.

2. An abundance of drinking water, the best supplied to any great city in the world, will be provided free to all. The report that a charge would be made for drinking water probably arose from the fact that hygeia water can also be had by those who may desire it at one cent a glass.

3. Ample provisions for seating will be made without charge.

4. About 1,500 toilet rooms and closets will be located at convenient points in the buildings and about the grounds, and they will be absolutely free to the public. This is as large a number in proportion to the estimated attendance as has ever been provided in any exposition. In addition to these there will also be nearly an equal number of lavatories and toilet rooms of a costly and handsome character as exhibits, for the use of which a charge of five cents will be made.

5. The admission fee of 50 cents will entitle the visitor to see and enter all the Exposition buildings, inspect the exhibits, and, in short, to see everything within the Exposition grounds, except the Esquimau Village and the reproduction of the Colorado cliff dwellings. For these as well as for the special attractions on Midway Plaisance a small fee will be charged.

6. Imposition or extortion of any description will not be tolerated.

7. Free medical and emergency hospital service is provided on the grounds by the Exposition management.

8. The Bureau of Public Comfort will provide commodious free waiting-rooms, including spacious ladies' parlor and toilet rooms in various parts of the grounds.

H. N. HIGINBOTHAM, President.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition, They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

THE FARMER'S LAMENT.

I'm sick and tired of hoeing, ditching,
And milking cows with tails a switching
In face and eyes;
There's little pay and lots of labor
In raising corn or taters, neighbor,
And fighting flies.

The farm and necessary fixtures
To me are not such pleasant pictures—
Scythe, fork and rake;
To tell the truth, I do not love them,
And, soaring far to realms above them,
My leave would take.

Oh for a season of refreshing!
Oh for a crop that's worth the threshing!
The farmer's pray,
Until one's ready for his coffin;
Their dying words we hear so often:
"Farming doesn't pay!"
—Pioneer Press.

IT looks as if D. F. Morgan, of Minneapolis would succeed Judge Lochran on the District Court bench. Some of the Minneapolis papers speak of the appointment of a Judge for Hennepin county. Just as if that county was the whole 4th Judicial District.

THE name of the grand "MacKaye Spectatorum" has been changed to the "Chicago Spectatorum" Chicago hayieg pledged over a million dollars for the completion of the Spectatorum led the inventor, Mr. McKaye to suggest the change of name. It is to be the most wonderful thing of the kind.

THE Norwegian Storthing has been adjourned without date and the contraversy between the Norwegians and there Sweedish King have not been settled. Norway being intrested to a much greater extent than Sweden in shipping interests thinks herself entitled to some priyileges in this line.

THE Democratic state central committee met in St. Paul on the 25th inst. and accepted the resignation of Chairman Lewis Baker and unanimously chose as his successor in office E. W. M. Cutcheon a member of the executive committee during the last campaign and a man who it is stated will stick up for democratic principles.

FOR the past few weeks the Atlantic seaboard from Hampton Roads to New York has witnessed the grandest Naval parade on record. Vessels from all the leading powers including the United States have been at anchor or sailing gracefully over the rough waves participating in doing honor to Christopher Columbus who four hundred years ago landed in this country.

LEGISLATIVE reapportionment was finally defeated in the house Monday. the fair and equitable reapportionment measure that was introduced by the committee being ignominously defeated. Every member from this district excepting Craig voted against the bill, for no other reason that we can conceive but to force Sherburne to remain in the same legislative district with Wright. Look out for squalls ahead.—Star News.

We dont feel alarmed for squalls ahead. The republicans of Wright county are harmonious, and propose, as they always have done, to do the fair thing by the republicans of Sherburne county. Let Sherburn county make known her wishes and Wright county will aid her all she can.—Wright County Times.

The Times editor seems quite brave. says "We don't feel alarmed for squalls ahead." Those through which the republican party of this Legislative district have passed may have had some effect which as time drags on will show itself more and more.

"The republicans of Wright county are harmonious, and propose, as they always have done, to do the fair thing by the republicans of Sherburne county," says the Times. In sighting history, as an evidence of harmony, in this instance they are rather lame, as also "to do the fair thing." How were they two years ago last fall? Were the Wright county republicans not so far from harmony as to disagree among themselves on a candidate for Senator. And did not Sherburne county nominate Mr. Holton, of Elk River for that position, as a compromise candidate? and not because the "Harmonious" Wright county republicans were disposed more than now to do the "fair thing"? and when he was fairly before the people as the republican nominee of the 38th district did not the "Times" join with others in hoisting another candidate, a defeated Wright county man, as a people's party candidate, and did they not succeed in getting him endorsed by the democrats, and was he not elected? And was this harmony? and was it doing what the Times thinks was the "fair thing by the republicans of Sherburn county." Would it not have been doing the "fair thing by the republicans of Sherburne county" for the Times and other Harmonious republicans of Wright county, to have gone to work and helped them elect their man to the State Senate?

"Let Sherburne county make known her wishes and Wright county will aid all she can."! Did they, or even the Times aid in electing W. H. Holton? Did Wright county aid them after Mr. Craig had made their wishes known in separating the two counties and placing them in different Legislative districts? Did not the Journal inform the public that the Times was a third or fourth rate clerk, or something of the kind in the Legislature, while he and the balance of the crew were working and voting against the "expressed wishes" of Sherburne county; this is a strange way to "aid her all we can" and it is an awful funny kind of Harmony.

Diphtheria Germs in Sawdust.

Omaha, April 22.—New lighth has been thrown on the propagation of contagious disease by a discovery made here to day. A woman living in a healthful neighborhood in Omaha in a heuse in which sanitary regulations were of the best was attacked a few days ago with malignant diphtheria. the physicians and health officers could not account for the disease until it was learned that the patient had received only a few days ago a box of eggs in sawdust and two children in the family sending the eggs had the diphtheria. It is presumed that the germs got into the sawdust with the eggs and spread when the package was opened.—P. P. Press.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 21, 1893.

Secretary Carlisle is daily proving himself to be the right man in the place. He has not alowed himself to become anxious or no excited during the finacial flurry of the week, brought about, as he firmly believes, by a combine of bankers who are seeing by a renewed demand for gold for shipment abroad to force an issue of bonds. So firm is the Secetary in his belief that this is true that he politly, but positively, declined to accept an invitation extended him by New York city bankers to meet them in that town fordiscussing the gold problem; he also, when it was sugested to him that the bankers would come to Washington to discuss the matter if he would invite them declined to do so. For the U. S. Treasury to be run entirely indebendent of Wall Street men is something decidedly new and compliments for Secretary Carlisle are herd on all sides, from republicans as well as from demoecmocrats, One gentelman, a personal friend said: "Secertary Carlisle believes that Wall Street bankers have entirely to much to say in the conduct of the financial depatmet of the financial dedartment of the goyerment in the past and that they are responsible for the present situation, Consequently he has no idea of taking them into his confidence as to what he intends doing. He proposes giving them a needed lesson by showing them that all the finance abilitv is not congregated in Wall Street, and they cannot dictate the country's financial programme." The firmness of Secretary Carlisle against an issue of bonds has already brought about a better condition of affairs, and it is believed that thoes who wish to compell an issue of bonds become convinced that none will be issued the demand for foreign shipment will soon resume its normal condition. The out look is now considered much better than it was at the begining of this week

Attorney General Olney has apparently been selected as the target at which to fire every slander and lie that is hatched up by the guttersnipes of the opposition and the sensational press. One of the most audacious of these was the one which purported to give in detail the particulars of Represenative Wilson, of West Virginia, being snubbed by the Attorney General, in the office of the latter, which was published at a time when it was known that Mr. Wilson would not be likely to see the story until it had had about two days publicity and worse than that, some of the papers that printed the lie neglected to print Mr. Wilson's unqualified denial, which was telegraphed to them as soon as he read the article. The Attorney General like the dignified gentleman that he is quietly preforms his official duties just as though the barking curs did not exist.

Many statements, some of them ridiculously absurd, have been made about President Cleveland's intentions concerning Hawaii. The fact of the matter is that he will await the report of commissoner Blout before deciding what to do It was because he did not consider the imformation at hand sufficiently definite to make up his mind what ought to be done that he sent Col. Blount to Hawaii. All statements to the countary and merely guesswork as neither the President nor Secretary Gresham will discuss the matter that is, not for publication.

President Cleveland and Secretary Gresham have been investigating the working of the much-talked-about reciprocity treaties made under the McKinley tariff law, and it looks now as if they were one and all failures and that they will have to go. Those with Brazil and with Spain for Cuba and Porto Rico will probably be the first to be abolished as there have been numerous comdlaints about the manner in which the coustoms officials of those countries have violated the treaties. Tables prepared at the State Department show that the whole system has been a failure and that instead of increasing the market for American products there has been, into several countries, a marked falling off in our trade since the treaties weut ineffect. The President believes that a conciliatory policy towards our neighbors will result in much greater commercial benefit to us than the policy of reciprocity by corcion which was practiced by the Harrison administration.

Hon. James E. Eustis of Louisiana, this week qualified as U. S. Ambassador to France, and today the left for New York whence he will start for Paris.

Sectary Herbert left today for Hampton Roads. He will fly his flag trom the Dolphin during the Naval Review and will accompany the international fleet to New York where he will be met by President Cleveland and the rest of the cabinet and where the final exercise will take place.

CORRESPONDENCE

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

The storm of last week is one that will be long remembered, spring went about 40 degs. in 1759 on the 17th of April hadone something similar but nothing like so severe, it has put quite a check on the farming industry, a good timenow for farmers to combine for a trust and put up prices on farm produce that's the way all other industry to-day, but farmers are a more generous class of people than them other fellows and do not llke to take abvantage of other peoples necessity, but to have severe winter when we should be basking in warm sunshine and inhaling the sweet odor of fragrant spring flower seems quite unnatural to man and beast but if not before summer dog days will cause the snow to disapear.

B. Batdorf and J. N. Patter will each build a new barn this spring.

The assessors of Hennepin meet at Court House Minneapolis next Saturday 29th present month.

This has been a No 1 sugar season two percent bounty on maple sugar for 500 lb. and over.

Pioneer creek is very high this spring.

It is expected that Decoration or Memorial day will be observed at Maple Plain. In the usual way everybody invited.

More rain yesterday and it is hard to tell when farmers can get on to the fields.

We believe some of the Independence people are thinking of taking in the World's Fair.

Delmont Gould went to Minneapolis yesterday, thinks of going on the drive in a few days.

MOUND CITY.

Wedding bells will soon ring again.

An auction was held Monday at the home of C. E. Whittaker, Louis Zahrendt was auctioneer.

J. Bently and family will soon move to Minneapolis.

Mrs. William Tipperman passed peacefully away on the 20th at the age of 67. Funeral services were held Sunday morning at the M. E. Church She leaves a husband a son and three daughters to mourn her loss.

Hennepin County Schools.

Sup't of Schools Lewis has concented to appoint Proff. Breen as his assistant. Prof. Breen is the choice of Hon. Edward Egan, James Wiley and John Hillstrom, leaders of the revolt against Schaffer. He is a good scholar a good teacher and a mighty good fellow.

The April session of the Hennepin County Teachers Association will convene in Curtiss Hall, Minneapolis, next Saturday at 10 o'clock A. M.

The school board at Maple Plain, it is thought will follow the instructions of the first school meeting and erecta one story, two room building the second meeting was not held at the time set in the notice and its acts are as illegant as of those of of a squad of men convened by accident on the street corner. But it is thought that the advocates of a two story building will call another meeting to validitate their action. It is claimed that if the school board proceed to erect a two-story-buiding they will simply have to pay for it out of their own pockets and be compelled to erect a one-story edifice besides according to the instructions at the first meeting. Then there is libie to be serious trouble about the matter at any rate if the mater stands as it is. The final outcome of this matter how ever will probaly be that the advocates of a two story house will call another meeting and validitate thei raction, ere long.

A letter from Neel McNeel to William Kenedy of Maple Plain states that there are five schools in his town (Dayton) that have not been visited by the supertendent for three years. It is about time for the commissioners to get after the superintandant with a sharp stick.

John Hillstrom has already secured the signitures of 50 prominent citizens and tax-payers in the town of Independence to his petition requesting the county commissoners to see to it that a new man is appointed to the position of assistant superintendent of schools. Pretty good for a town that was at first reported to be solid for the old assistant.

John McGaryisms.

MR. EDITOR:—While I have been sitting in the house most of the time for the last two weeks on account of storm, waitlng for warmth, sunshine, and the grass to grow, my thoughts naturally wandered back to the good old Puritan days of Minnesota. Have sojourned here almost as long as the children of Israel wandered in the wilderness, and never remember of seeing such a stormy, cold, and backward spring. It looks a little discouraging to the farming class. And the Nimrods cannot draw upon the forest a supply of game to replenish their larder as they did in days gone by, but must trust wholy to a kind providence and the products of the soil for that which snstains life, during the two weeks of leisure have had ample time to review the Israelitish trayels from the Red Sea until they landed at Jericho on the west of Jordon in a land that flowed with milk and honey according to historic facts as we glean them from the bible, do not expect ever to see a millennium this side of Christ's second coming but by industry, Economy, frugality, etc. Hope to endure to the end if those in authority do not knock us out. But in these days there is such a deversifide deference in man's opinion in regard to religion, politics, and national affairs that it is hard to tell where he may bring up, about every man you meet is clamoring for a religion of his own. Claims that he has in his veins the pure blood of an ourangotang, man lives and dies without hope or prospect of a future life returns to the earth and is lost. In politics many thingh confront us. There are evils numerous to mention. Each party is clamoring for the power to rule, while the individual politician has his head high in the air trying to scent a Government office wholy for the spoils there is in it, and for this many of them willingly sacrafice friends, honor etc. to gain the coveted prize.

Senator Stewart and Hoar are discussing in the New York Tribune the monetary question to the common people and even to many well versed in political economy. It seems Mr. Hoar takes the side of gold, only as the legal standard, this undoubtedly is favor of the gold bugs or money class while Mr. Stewart favors free coinage of silver.

The June bug has his golden wing,
The Lightning bug the flame,
The Gold bug has no wing's at all,
But he gets there all the same.

To make gold the only legal standard would be to give the money class the power, and abridge the rights and privileges of the poor. Many oppose the free coinage of silver and yet they say we must encourage home industry. Mining is one of our greatest industries and should be looked after more than any one industry we have, but in this monetary issue before the people there is a blind. Barnum said to make a success you must first humbug the people. This he did and made an everlasting fortune, the people like it, yes, they realy enjoy it That is just what these sharpers are trying to do with the monetary question, humbug them, a silver dollar is just as good now as it was in 1873 when it was at a premium of 30 per cent and yet was Demonitized. Now Mr. Editor when I started out did not intend to stretch over a very large amount of space in your valuable paper, but while the stormy weather kept me indoor, my thoughts wandered, and could not seem to find the corner stake of Political Economy.

The farmers that have maple orchards have been making large amounts of sugar and syrup this spring. Running opposition to Speckels and the Sandwich Islands.

Oel Hall of Montanna arrived here this week, fine weather in that country grass a foot high.

Waiters and "Tips."

Mr. Baumann, one of the proprietors of the Holland House, said to a Press reporter yesterday that the up rising of the waiters against the rule enforcing shaving in there demands.

"You may consider it a preposterous statement" he said "but I have one man who waits on me. It takes his time and he is not willing to attend my table with out a tip. Among our guests now are two families whose heads refuse to tip waiters. These guests pay the hotel a good deal of money and refuse, as a matter of principal to give extra fees for dining room service. It takes two waiters to attend these familes. The waiters complained to the head waiter that they were loosing tips and declined to serve the families. As a matter of self protection and self reservation we actually gave each of ehese waiters $5 a piece extra besides their wages to wait on the guests while they were here. If we should pay our waiters $75 a month each, they would not be satisfiid without tips. What are we going to do?"

In hotels run on the European plan there is said to be more trouble about tips than in a house managed on the American plan. One of the men in charge of the dining room at the Fifth Avenue said yesterday: "Our waiters are expected to take their chances on obtaining tips. They are not allowed to neglect any one or a family who do not believe in tiping. They may have off days or bad weeks so far as fees go, but they understand that they are expeted to serve everybody alike. Should they complain to the head waiter because guests did not tip them they would be dismissed. We pay our waiters $30 a month and feed them, and we seldom have trouble.—New York Press.

THOSE versed in the science of optics tell us that no living creature can see in absolute darkness. Some representatives of the animal kingdom have eyes extremely sensitive to rays of light of low intensity, but there must be some light present or no vision.

IT is now claimed that there is such a thing as electric sunstroke. The workers around electrical furnaces in which metal aluminum is produced suffer from them. The intense light causes painful congestions, which cannot be wholly prevented by wearing deep-colored glasses.

THERE is a very superficial quarantine at Halifax, according to the statements of Canadian newspapers. Immigrants are landed there, without detention, from any country in Europe and travel where they wish. It might be well for our government to present a severe protest against this criminal negligence.

MR. MALLOCK has been estimating how much money English people would have apiece if all that that there is in that country were distributed equally. He states that the gross income is 6,500 millions of dollars and that there are 8,500,000 families in the United Kingdom. That would give $765 for each family.

THE youngest bank president in the United States is Mrs. Annie Moore, of Mount Pleasant, Tex. She is also the only woman who is president of a national bank. This bank was operated for some time as a private concern with Mrs. Moore at the head, and so capable had she proved herself that the vote to keep her in command was unanimous.

IN this neck of the woods we have our silver weddings and our tin weddings, but in Kansas the lead wedding is the popular thing. It is a simple matter, consisting simply in a shotgun fusillade from a charivari party and a return fire by the groom. The last Kansas function of that kind resulted in the instant death of two of the guests and the mortal wounding of a third.

THE eye is so delicately adjusted that if one were to heed its warnings very little injury would result to it, but unfortunately men and women alike seem to think that at all times and under all physical conditions can this little organ be kept at high pressure. They never think that general diseases or such as usually manifest themselves in other organs may develop special eye diseases.

DR. JOHN A. BROADUS relates that Ole Bull once said to him: "If I quit practicing on my violin for a day I notice the difference; if I quit for two days my friends notice the difference; if I quit for a week everybody notices the difference." This is only an amplified version of the French saying that genius is patience long continued. It it like Sarah Bernhardt rehearsing a play a hundred times, as she is said to have done, before permitting the curtain to rise before an audience.

THE unexpected sometimes happens even in politics. In Jersey City recently the republicans of a certain ward, in which there is a large democratic majority, met to nominate candidates for various offices, a mere formality for the sake of party discipline. The last place to be filled was that of justice of the peace. As a joke one man suggested the elevator boy of the building in which the meeting was held as the candidate. It was seconded and carried. The election came and the elevator boy found himself duly elected justice of the peace. The boy was a sensible one and stuck to his elevator.

THE London Telegraph puts aside insular prejudice for a moment to call Thomas Edison "the gifted electrician, the real magician, the real wonder-worker, the wizard whose rod has been that of Aaron and has swallowed up all the other enchanters' 'baguettes,' whose fame has become world-wide, who never had more than two months' schooling and who began life at the age of twelve as a railway newsboy." Mr. Edison has had a surfeit of praise, but he will probably regard this, when he considers its source and all, as the very climax of compliments. And happily it is well deserved.

THE news from the Old World indicates that a large part of the eastern portion of European Russia is again menaced by famine. In the government of Perm the privation is reported to be worse than ever before. The poor are dying off by hundreds, and the mortality is so great that in some places the people have ceased to bury the dead. Doubtless in other portions of the vast empire the crops have been good enough to leave cereal food to spare for others after providing for wants at home, but the facilities for transportation are bad, and the people suffer whenever local crops fail.

LEGISLATIVE NOTES.

The Twenty-eighth Minnesota Legislature Shuts Up Shop.

A Resume of the Work Done and Undone—Important Bills Passed and Defeated—The New Capitol, Tax Levy, Etc.

The 28th session of Minnesota law makers is ended. The list of important bills that have become laws is by no means as short as some may imagine. Heading the list probably, in point of general interest, is the free text book bill, and ranking close to it, as far as certain classes of the population are concerned, are the administration grain bills, so called, and bills which have for their object the relief of organized labor in the cities. An important bill that passed is the bill making it a misdemeanor for any person to cruelly whip a child. Under the present law such offenders can only be reached under a warrant for a disturbance of the peace. Bills that are nearly akin to the bill last named were passed at the instance of the Minneapolis society for the prevention of cruelty to animals. Under their operation the society can proceed in a systematic manner and reach certain offenders who until now have been able to escape punishment.

The only bill the society lost was the bill prohibiting the docking of horses' tails.

The present legislature passed a law providing a penalty for the crime of incest. Strange as it may seem, there has been no law on this point, and the fact was not discovered until this winter, when an incest case came before a judge in the southern part of the state. The legislature promptly took hold of the matter and has filled this big gap in the penal code. A bill that will be regarded as important is the bill providing for a parole system at the penitentiary and reformatory. The matter was suggested by the governor in a message to the legislature, and the bill was passed without opposition.

A bill was passed which will affect insane persons charged with crime. It was called out by the facts in connection with the trial of the young man who shot the editor of the Stillwater Messenger. The aim of the law will be to make the escape of such persons more difficult, where there is a doubt as to their mental condition.

The new capitol bill must, of course, be considered an important measure, no matter what opinion may be entertained of its merits. Under its provisions the building will be completed in 10 years, and be located at some point within three-quarters of a mile of the present site.

The Winston election bill does not seek to affect the relations established by the old law between the voter and the judges of election, but does affect the judges in the matter of counting the ballots. The present form of the ballot is not changed. According to an estimate made by Mr. Winston, the judges, with the new law, ought to finish the count in the slowest precinct in a city by 8 o'clock of the morning after the election.

Senator Leavitt is responsible for a proposition to amend the constitution which will be submitted to the people at the next election and which provides for a tax upon incomes over a certain size.

The bill providing that railroad companies shall make their selection of swamp lands within two years will please the people living in the counties where these lands are situated.

Mr. Bleecker of Hennepin got through a bill which the traveling public will appreciate. It provides that a railroad ticket shall be good for transportation both ways between the destination points.

Many citizens of the state will long remember the legislature for the passage of the bill adopting a state flag. The idea originated with the women who are interested in the world's fair in Minnesota, and the bill was engineered through the senate by Mr. Donnelly and through the house by Mr. Wyman.

Aside from the bills passed, there is one matter that will commend itself to the people of the state by reason of the investigation put under way to run to earth the coal combine. The committee having charge of the investigation will turn its evidence and papers over to the attorney general, who has explicit instructions to proceed with the prosecution as rapidly as possible. It remains to be seen whether the investigation will bring any direct benefits to the people of the state in the way of reduced prices for hard coal. But if there is no such result immediately there are many who believe such a reduction will come in time, owing to the efforts of the committee.

There were certainly important bills that failed to pass. At the head of the list stands the Markham bill for the taxation of unused railway lands. The reapportionment bills and the charter bill come next, and then follow in order the primary election bills, the income tax bill, the sleeping car tax bill, the county option bill, the anti-pool room bill, the corrupt practices bill, the woman suffrage bill, and possibly a few others.

Among the bills passed were two known by the members as the "administrative bills," because it was said and believed that the present executive had, to a certain extent, something to do with the paternity of them. One provides that all country elevators shall be public warehouses and brought under the control of the railroad and warehouse commission. The other provides for condemnation proceedings for the erection of elevators alongside of or adjacent to railroad rights of way, and for the construction of sidetracks to these elevators. At present only elevators of a certain capacity—30,000 bushels—can be built on railroad rights of way, and if they are built alongside the rights of way the companies will not extend side tracks to them. The new law provides that elevators of any capacity whatever may be built at any station or siding, either on railroad land or adjacent thereto, and that trackage facilities must be provided.

Organized labor did not make any pressing requests of the present legislature, but seemed disposed to allow the members in the main to follow out their own ideas. The bill providing that men shall not lose any of their rights of citizenship in order to secure employment may properly be called a bill in the interest of organized labor. It was designed to benefit a class of men who, for reasons well known, do not belong to any labor organization—the employes of the Twin City street railway system. Labor will also be interested in the bill providing that street cars shall be vestibuled, and in the bill which is designed to protect labels and punish imitations thereof. A bill that will interest laboring men was passed late in the session. It provides that the first Monday in September—Labor Day—shall be a legal holiday in Minnesota.

The state teachers' certificate bill provides that there shall be issued in this state what shall be known as a state certificate. It is to be good as long as a teacher employs himself at that calling, and is only to lapse after an interval of three years, during which the holder shall follow another calling. This certificate is issued in the first place after a careful examination by state authorities, and by means of its operation teachers will not have to submit themselves to a new examination every time they go from one county to another to take a school.

Both the principal political parties were averse to meddling with the liquor laws, and while several bills have been passed which amend the existing statutes in certain cases, the amendments are trifling and will apply almost wholly in the country districts and in the smaller towns. One bill provides for a pro rata rebate where a certain tract of country is taken into an incorporated village or town and the saloonkeeper is compelled to shut up shop. Another provides that a certain per cent of the license received in small towns may be devoted to certain educational purposes. In no way has the general liquor law, in its leading characteristics, been changed. The only bill which proposed anything like a change, the county option bill, was defeated on general orders in the house.

The efforts to curtail the militia wound up by passing the bill appropriating $4,000 for a rifle range at Lake City, where it stopped. The spokesman in the house for the militia men was a member of the brigadier general's staff, and he introduced a number of bills pointing at needed improvements in the national guard, but all of them fell by the wayside. He wanted blankets, overcoats and other accoutrements for men and wanted to change the organization of the regiments so as to conform to the regimental organizations of the regular army. But the legislature couldn't see it. The only bill that proposed to hit the national guard squarely between the eyes was the bill of Senator Davis of Nicollet. It provided for reducing the number of regiments from three to two, so as to knock out the brigade formation. This passed the senate, but was run to the ground in the house.

The new constitutional amendment prohibiting special legislation acted as a break upon the legislative wheels for some weeks after the opening of the session. Members went on as at previous sessions, introducing their special bills, and before a great while the members of the judiciary committee in each house were buried to their chins in a mass of literature, all of which was clearly in opposition to the new amendment. The two judiciary committees finally appealed to the attorney general for an opinion, and with his help got out from under the pile. But the new machine did not work without squeaking. The friction was only too apparent. Members failed to adapt themselves to the new conditions and draft their special bills in a general form. A bill was introduced in the senate and passed providing for submitting to the people in 1894 a proposition to repeal the new amendment. The bill stuck in the house, however, and could not be reached. Probably by another two years the legislature will be prepared to do business naturally on the new basis, which will remove most of the difficulty and lighten the work of the judiciary committees. Notwithstanding the new amendment, a number of bills passed which have special legislation in view entirely. They were drawn in a general form, however, so as to conform to the law, or if this was not passed under the assumption that a special law would be tolerated where it was impossible to make a law fit the case. The chief one of these bills was the bill setting aside $100,000 for drainage of certain territory in the valley of the Red river. Another special bill, though drawn in general form, was the bill providing that cities in certain cases may order public improvements and assess the cost of them against the owner of the abutting property. This bill was passed for the special relief of Winona, which wanted immediately to let a contract for brick paving to be laid in certain streets.

Another special bill, disguised as a general law, is the bill requiring cities having to exceed 130,000 population to erect public morgues. This was a Minneapolis bill pure and simple, and was got through by Mr. Bleecker. It so happens that St. Paul already has a public morgue, so the members from that city did not oppose the bill.

Another bill of this class is the bill requiring railroad trains to stop at all county seats in the state. It is intended for the relief of Pine City, through whose borders the passenger trains are said to rush at full speed, only stopping when flagged. This law was amended so as not to apply to fast mail trains.

There have been but four vetoes, and most of them were evaded by an amendment of the bills to meet the governor's objections.

PRETTY PEARLS.

THE best pearls are found on the Ceylon coast and in the Persian gulf.

THE pearl is the only gem that does not require the lapidary's art to bring out its beauty.

THE perfectly round pearls are the most valuable; next come the pear-shaped, and lastly the egg-shaped.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

A Great Scheme.

A few days ago articles of incorporation were filed with the secretary of state for a company known as the Minnesota Canal company. Upon the face it looked as though the organization was effected for the purpose of building a canal from Duluth to the Twin Cities. It now develops that this is a secondary consideration, the prime object being to furnish water power for Duluth.

The first operations of the company will be to construct a canal from a point six or seven miles above Cloquet on the St. Louis river to Duluth. President Henry Curtis Spalding, of the company, said today that 50 miles of navigable canal will be built within a year. The purpose of the company is to furnish cheap transportation in the season of navigation, and a good level road for heavy hauling in the winter time. The chief and most important aim, however, is to furnish the manufacturing industries of Duluth and vicinity with cheap power. The canal will be brought into the city at an elevation of 630 or 640 feet above the level of Lake Superior, and will run along the brow of the hill.

The project means more for Duluth and the head of the lakes, if carried to a successful completion, than anything that man has yet been able to do for these cities. Greater power will be developed than can be furnished at either Minneapolis, Holyoke, Lawrence or Manchester.

The preliminary surveys have been completed and the necessary legislation from state secured. Not till the company filed its articles was the cat let out. The project involves the construction of a dam across the St. Louis river at a point just where the canal is to lead from the river. A portion of the river will be incorporated in the system. The canal will be 20 feet deep and 120 feet wide. The course of the canal from the river to Duluth will not be exactly an air line, but it is much shorter than the course taken by the river. The dam will be 500 feet long. Large docks will be built on the canal at West Duluth and Duluth. Before the work in this county is completed the company expects to expend $6,000,000 in improvements of waterways.

When the canal is completed, Mr. Spalding says, the power furnished by the company will not be impeded by back water in time of freshets, nor diminished from low water in time of drouth. The capital of the concern is $2,000,000, and its officers are: Henry Curtis Spalding of Duluth, president; Milton Weston of Chicago, vice president; Frank F. Davis of Minneapolis, secretary; A. C. Martin of Chicago, treasurer. Other prominent persons interested are: Flavius J. Barber, Percival Steele, S. M. Mock, of Chicago.

Burned Up.

J. A. Shea's fruit and commission house on Bridge Square, Minneapolis, was burned, also part of the Jewell lodging house. When the latter caught fire several policemen hastened through the various rooms, arousing the sleepers. A little longer delay in doing this and two men in the third story nearest to the burning building would have been smothered. When discovered they were nearly unconscious, and could not be made to realize their peril. They were dragged into safety by main force. The other inmates scrambled to the street in all sorts of impromptu toilets, carrying their worldly possessions with them. One individual, determined to save his own and his wife's hats, carried them all on his head, presenting a comical appearance.

Mr. Shea estimates his loss at $40,000.

Cut His Throat.

Seth Clear-Eyes, a young Indian who has been attending the government school at Carlisle, Pa., made a desperate attempt at suicide at the Union depot barber shop, St. Paul.

He was sitting in the shop with a comrade from the school, apparently waiting his turn, as the chairs were full, when he suddenly started from his seat, and seizing a razor from the mirror shelf dashed it across his throat before he could be stopped by either his friend or the barbers in the shop. His companion, who was with him en route to their home at Harlem, Mont., says that he knows of no reason why Clear-Eyes should have thus attempted his life. His injuries are serious and may prove fatal.

Fell to His Death.

Chris Peterson, a porter employed at the International hotel, on Jackson street near Seventh, St. Paul, while cleaning windows fell from the second story to the ground, a distance of about 20 feet. The thoroughfare was crowded at the time, and a large number of persons hastened to the assistance of the prostrate man. When picked up it was found that Peterson's skull was fractured. He lay in an unconscious condition for a short time and then died.

News in Brief.

Albert Hollenbeck, 15 years old, was sentenced by the Minneapolis courts to two years at the reform school for stealing from freight cars.

Congressman Tawney was severely injured in St. Paul. He was going down stairs in one of the stores, when he slipped and fell to the bottom, striking his head.

Gov. Nelson signed the omnibus appropriation bill after disallowing items amounting to $237,000. The university suffers to the extent of $60,000. The state prison loses $24,460. The $25,000 for wolf bounties was also cut off.

There was a rise of nearly six inches in the waters of Lake Minnetonka in 36 hours. The stage of water is higher than at any time last year. When the snow melts old residents prophesy a rise the like of which has not been known during the present generation.

Senator Jay La Due will be the Minnesota representative at the opening of the world's fair. But one representative is allowed from each state.

The state world's fair committee has appropriated $100 to A. P. Foster, of Plainview, to pay for transporting his Jersey cow to and from the fair. The American Jersey Cattle club, which made the selections of cattle to go to the fair, looked at over 20,000 head, and as only 15 were selected, it is an honor to Mr. Foster and a credit to Minnesota that one of his cows was chosen.

John Hansen, who was walking on the track between the station and water tank at Pipestone, was struck by lightning and instantly killed. He was a single man about 30 years old, and resided at Estherville, Ia.

HE HAD HIS REVENGE.

How a Schoolboy Got Even with the Teacher Who Had Flogged Him.

The last time that I saw ex-President Hayes alive was at the time that the National Prison association, of which he was the president, held its annual convention in Boston, says a writer in the Globe of that city. I can see and hear now how he enjoyed a story that Rev. Fred C. Wines, secretary of the association, and son of its founder, was fond of telling at the family expense. It was at the reception to the delegates and others given at the Tremont house.

I had been talking to Mr. Wines, and turned to introduce some one to him, and presto, his name was gone from my mind. I was making a clean breast of my stupidity about names, and then Mr. Wines said he would tell again the story which he found fixed in people's minds his name that queerly enough, as it is one of the best advertised names in the country, they seem prone to forget. His father, to make a good short story, was once the principal of a boy's college. One day he had occasion to "trounce" a boy, and the lad took his scathing revenge by writing in big letters upon the front door after the plate, which was inscribed "Wines"—"and other lickers."

SPARKLING DIAMONDS.

THE black diamond is so hard that it cannot be polished.

AN uncut diamond looks very much like a bit of the best gum arabic.

THE Orloff diamond is believed to be responsible for sixty-seven murders.

THE diamond mines of Brazil have yielded over 15,000,000 carats of stones, valued at $150,000,000.

THE diamond, if laid in the sun and then carried into a dark room, shows distinct phosphorescence.

THE Regent diamond, the property of the French government, weighs 136 carats and is valued at 12,000,000 francs.

HOOD'S Sarsaparilla CURES

"Three years ago my wife suffered with inflammation and soreness of the bowels, which a physician said was caused by a tumor, and that if his remedies did not help her, she would be unable to get relief. They failed to bring about satisfactory results. The tumor became larger, and finally she could only lay on one side at night. In February she had an attack of

ALLEGORY.

To the large land of Science angered came.

She had borne till now from her neighbor foe
A thousand odious wrongs—or fancied so.

But he, indifferent to her love or hate,
Had smiled contemptuous at her vaunted state.

Yet both, being met, were pierced with sharp surprise
At deeps divine in one another's eyes

"I deemed," said Poesy, "thou couldst never wear
So much of human in thine austere air!"

"And I," said Science, "dreamed not thou couldst be So simple and yet so clad with sovereignty!"

Hence 'tis now rumored that ere long these twain
Shall merge in marriage their divided reign,

And that grim Reason, when the knot is tied (Science commanding), shall as priest preside,

While Poesy issues an august decree;
All the Nine Muses must her bridesmaids be.

SAILED INTO NO PORT.

Ships the Fates of Which Are Mysteries of the Atlantic.

Many Have Doubtless Foundered in Fields of Ice While Others Have "Limped In" After All Hope Had Been Abandoned.

Crossing the broad Atlantic, now buried under blinding mists, now tossed by driving tempests, where float vessels derelict more dangerous than the mountainous iceberg, where fire is more pitiless than on land—who shall say what tragedies are not there enacted? And when mystery shrouds the fate of those who have trusted themselves upon the treacherous waters never to return, how much more terrible the tragedy!

A stately ship steams from the harbor for a voyage across the sea. No alarm is felt when it does not reach its destination on the day it is expected. Two days or three days pass, and it has been detained by head winds and storms, the agents say. A week goes by and still no news. Then the story is that the machinery has broken down. Other vessels arrive over the same path, but bring no word of the missing ship, and anxious friends and relatives are comforted by the assurance that the vessel has drifted out of the usual course of travel while making repairs.

They are told the ship could not sink. Its strong steel sides could defy the waves. Its water-tight compartments would keep it afloat after any collision, and it could not have burned, else its iron hull would have been sighted by other vessels attracted by the glow of the flames. Another week and a month and hearts grow sick with hope deferred.

Perhaps then a bit of wreckage is found bearing the name of the doomed ship. More delay without news, and finally even the agents and owners give up hope. Then the insurance companies pay, the vessel is officially lost, and another is added to the mysteries of the deep.

There follows invariably the cruel hoax of some idiot or worse. A sealed bottle is picked up giving alleged news of the ship. Usually discrepancies in the letters themselves pronounce them bogus, but before this is discovered the feelings of those who have waited so long in vain are harrowed by a tale of storm and fire and a despairing farewell.

Fortunately, however, the mystery does not always end in a tragedy. Sometimes even after hope is abandoned the ship comes limping in with machinery disabled or perhaps under sail alone, with all on board safe. Sometimes after having drifted far out of the course it is towed in by another ship. Or, even if it is lost, the passengers are frequently rescued by some passing vessel.

From the stout steamer President, which was lost more than half a century ago, to the Naronic, the list is indeed long. The names of some of these unfortunate vessels have become historic.

The President left New York just thirty-two years ago for Liverpool, with thirty-one passengers aboard. It steamed out of sight forever. Hope, however, was not abandoned until the Britannic arrived at Boston without bringing any news of the missing vessel. There were no transatlantic cables in those days, and the news could only be brought by water.

Shortly before the Britannic sailed there was great excitement at Liverpool over the arrival of the Oriental, which resembled the President, from Egypt. The Oriental was at first supposed to be the long missing President.

In the New York Herald of Friday, May 7, 1841, appeared the following account of the fate of the President:

"Its probable fate was met in the immense fields and islands of ice which we recently described as intercepting its course to the east. She could not swamp in a mere storm. It has run against an iceberg at night and gone down head foremost.

"God have mercy upon the soul of poor Capt. Roberts and all his passengers. Roberts was the first man to cross the Atlantic in a steamer, and the first to fall a victim to his honorable enterprise."

Then followed the names of the thirty-one persons comprising the passenger list.

No marine disaster before or since, probably, has been the cause of so much excitement and speculation as the mysterious fate which befell the City of Boston of the Inman line.

The City of Boston was in its day regarded as a remarkably fine specimen of naval architecture, carrying freight, mail and passengers. The vessel had been built under special survey and had received the highest classification at Lloyds' and the Liverpool Association of Underwriters. Its length of keel was 305 feet and length over all 322 feet. It was 39 feet wide and 27 feet 6 inches deep. Under the old measurements its tonnage was 2,278. It had two engines of 300 horse-power each.

The City of Boston was of iron, and its ribs and beams, and, indeed, its whole framing, were securely bound together by heavy springing plates and ties. It was divided into eight compartments by seven strong and well-secured water bulkheads, reaching from keelson to upper deck. Besides steam power the City of Boston could spread a great deal of canvas, being ship rigged.

The City of Boston left New York January 25, 1870, and cleared from Halifax three days later for Southampton and Liverpool. It had aboard, besides the crew, 112 cabin and steerage passengers. It carried a cargo of cotton, flour, beef, wheat and copper ore, weighing 890 tons and 937 tons of coal. The machinery weighed 390 tons.

Nothing was ever heard of the ship after it left Halifax. February 23 an English government steamer was dispatched from Halifax to search for the missing steamer, but without result. It was hoped up to that time that the machinery had broken down and the ship was proceeding under sail alone.

The excitement throughout this country and England over the fate of the City of Boston was intense. When in March a dispatch was received from Liverpool stating that the ship was safe the joy was boundless. The news was announced in the house of representatives, where business was immediately suspended, while the members congratulated one another on the good tidings. In this city preparations were made to fire cannon in the City Hall park and otherwise to celebrate the safe arrival of the missing vessel.

A second dispatch arrived a few hours later which put an end to the preparations for the celebration. It announced that there was no foundation for the news that the City of Boston was safe. The disappointment redoubled the anxiety felt before.

Mr. Inman three months after the ship sailed, in a letter to the board of trade of London, gave as his opinion that the City of Boston had got into a big field of floating ice, where it had probably foundered in a storm.

Bottles containing alleged news from passengers aboard the City of Boston were found yearly for half a dozen years after the disappearance of the ship. As late as 1876 it was surmised that the vessel had been blown up by dynamite, exploded by an infernal machine.

The winter and spring of 1870 was a season of terrific gales that swept the Atlantic from north to south. At the same time that the Boston was missing the Samaria, of the Cunard line, and the ironclad Atlanta, which had been sold after the war to the president of Hayti, were also supposed to be lost.

Another steamship which, like the City of Boston, was never heard of after leaving port was the Pacific, of the Collins line. The Pacific sailed from Liverpool for this port in February, 1856. The ocean was scoured for some trace of it by steamers sent out for that purpose, among them being the Arctic, the vessel which went to the Polar seas in search of Dr. Kane. Whether the Pacific foundered in a storm, was sunk by a collision with another vessel or by running into an icecerg or was burned was never learned.

The fate of the Erin of the National line is still fresh in the memory of all. The Erin was one of the stanchest vessels afloat at the time it started on its last voyage. It was built at Newcastle in 1864, and was of 4,500 tons. It was 415 feet long, 41 feet wide, and 35 deep. It left New York December 28, 1889, for Liverpool with a crew of 55 men under charge of Capt. Tyson. The deck cargo consisted of 528 cattle. The Erin was sighted December 31 off Cape Sable, proceeding east under a full head of steam, and that was the last seen of it. The British steamship Creole, Capt. Darling, picked up a lifeboat January 9 containing ten ash oars and bearing the name "Erin." Near the boat floated a life buoy, a steamer's bridge and an awning. The Gallia, which arrived a few days later, reported that it had passed through a great number of floating carcasses of cattle.

In spite of this hope was not abandoned. Capt. Darling of the Creole had reported that the boat which he picked up bore the name "Erin of London," when as a matter of fact the vessel was not a London ship. The fact that the Florida had lost 40 cattle was given as an explanation of the Gallia's find. News was expected for a long while from the Azores, but none came. Not the faintest trace of it was ever discovered.

It was not until the Timos from Gibraltar and the Astral from Rotterdam arrived at New York, the former passing over the track of the Erin without reporting any news of the missing ship, that hope was abandoned. Three months after the Erin sailed a bottle was found containing a letter purporting to have been written by one of the dozen cattle men aboard, stating that the ship was burning and death by fire or water in the great storm which was raging at the time was a matter of a few minutes only.

The London board of trade, in its report on the loss of the Erin, stated that the vessel had probably been overloaded, but the board did not venture the opinion that it was this that led to the loss of the ship. The Erin, the board declared, had probably foundered in the heavy January gales.

Of the fortunate cases in which the human freight at least of ships long missing has been saved the most remarkable probably is that of the Danmark of the Thingvalla line. The Danmark, Capt. Knudsen, with 720 Norwegian and Swedish emigrants, left Copenhagen March 20.

So long was the vessel missing that its loss seemed assured.

The City of Chester, of the Inman line, Capt. Bond, which arrived at Queenstown April 12, reported that in latitude 46 degrees north, longitude 37 degrees west, it had passed the abandoned Danmark. The fact, however, that the boats of the Danmark were reported missing seemed to indicate that the passengers might be safe, and the chains fastened to the bow of the abandoned steamer led shipping men to believe that it had been in tow of some other vessel.

It was not until April 22 that news was received of the Danmark's passengers, all of whom were safe. The vessel had broken its shaft in a storm April 4, and lay helpless in heavy seas. Fortunately the Missouri, from London, bound for Philadelphia and Baltimore, fell in with the almost sinking ship. The Missouri took the Danmark in tow, but on the following day, as the disabled ship seemed likely to sink at any moment, it was cast adrift. The Missouri, previous to this, had taken aboard but twenty of the Danmark's passengers, but now it jettisoned its cargo and took aboard all. Most of them were left on the Azores, but the Missouri brought 370 to Philadelphia. Engineer Kaas, of the Danmark, was killed when the shaft broke.

The list of marine accidents and mysteries might be multiplied indefinitely. It is to be noted, however, that the adoption of international codes of signals and regulations and the advance in the art of shipbuilding are rendering the percentage of accidents smaller each year.—Chicago Tribune.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Eggs poached in milk are an appetizing and nutritious dish for an invalid. The milk should come to the scalding point, when the egg is dropped in and cooked as if in water. A little of the hot milk is poured over the toast to soften it, before the egg is slipped on.—N. Y. Times.

—Chocolate Cake: One cup of sugar, two cups of flour, one cup of milk, two eggs, butter size of an egg, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Icing—One-half cup of grated chocolate, three tablespoonfuls of sweet milk; let it heat slowly, and when boiling stir in a teaspoonful of cornstarch wet with cold milk; simmer till it thickens.—Detroit Free Press.

—Soft Custard Pudding: Line a pudding dish with lady fingers or slices of sponge cake; make a soft custard of one quart of milk; yolks of five eggs, and pour over all; beat the white to a froth (stiff), with one half cup of fine sugar; spread over the top; set in an oven, and brown slightly; the custard should be flavored with vanilla.—Boston Herald.

—Rice Griddle Cakes: Scald one pint of milk, set it in a pan of cold water until cool, then stir in one cupful and a half boiled rice, two cupfuls of flour, half cupful of soft yeast, half teaspoonful salt, beat well and cover, set in a warm place until morning, then beat two eggs well and stir into the batter, if too thin add more flour, let it stand a little while before baking.—N. Y. Observer.

—Banana Sauce: Peel and slice with a silver knife four large red bananas, put in a deep dish and mash, with a wooden masher; and gradually one cup of powdered sugar, beating all the time: when smooth add one tablespoonful of thick cream, beat and add another spoonful, beat again and add a third spoonful; if too thin for hard sauce add more sugar, stir well, put in a cold place, and serve with banana pudding.

—Hoosier Potatoes: For dinner they are pared and boiled till nearly done, then put in the kettle with nice boiling white turnips to finish. As much turnip as potato is the rule, and the turnips must be put to cook half an hour earlier to be done at the same time. When done, drain; let the kettle stand uncovered over the fire a moment to drive out the steam from the vegetables, and mash them together, mixing well with two spoonfuls of butter, salt to taste and serve in a well-smoothed mound in a hot dish with pepper on the top. This is a nice way of serving turnips, without the strong flavor most persons dislike, and potatoes of ordinary quality are better used in this fashion.—Boston Globe.

DRESS GOODS FOR SPRING.

Handsome Fabrics That Have Just Been Introduced.

There is a prevalence of smooth, finely-woven surfaces in the spring woolens. A large proportion of them are silk-and-wool mixtures, the silk being in dots or splashes or wide diagonal wales of bright, contrasting colors. They are soft, light and pliable, and the only embarrassment to the shopper is that all are so attractive it is hard to choose. Among the choicest fabrics are the fine-repped, light-weight velours. They are olives dotted with lavender, yellow and greenish-blue; French rose, with Indian red, yellow and blue; French gray splashed with yellow, blue and white. A still lighter weight, called grenadine velours, has a two-toned effect, a black-and-white ground being flecked with yellow or heliotrope. Novelty bengalines show electric effects, silk threads of contrasting color being thrown up in irregular zig-zag lines, like forked lightning—hence the name. A soft gray with silvery white is one of the prettiest of these, and there are olives with greenish gold, old rose with sage green, and an infinite number of other attractive combinations.

For street and traveling gowns the cheviots and Scotch tweeds are especially desirable; and though in some of them all the colors in the rainbow are combined, this is done so deftly that the effect is quiet and subdued. Silk of any one of these colors can be used for trimming or for the popular guimpses and blouses. The whip cords and fine reps in solid colors are recommended for long journeys, as they repel dust. Youthful and girlish are some vertical cords in shaded stripes of grays and tans flecked with color.

Dauphine is a novelty of the season, a French lawn with moire effect and corded stripe woven in it, and dainty floral designs printed in colors; there are pale pinks with lavender, blue grays with pink and blue, and an infinite variety of lovely hues and patterns. The plumetis or tamboured organdies—very like the dotted and embroidered mulls of our grandmothers' time—with the batistes and dauphines, take the place of the familiar organdies and lawns. The former are shown in many daring patterns of brilliant-hued vines and flowers, but also in delicate clusters and sprays of fine flowers in every color upon white or colored grounds.—Chicago Mail.

Pickerel and Eel.

A canal in Pennsylvania needing some repairs, the water was drawn off, leaving, among other things, a pickerel and an eel stranded in the low water. The pickerel was fully fifteen inches long, and the puddle of clear water in which both the eel and the fish were was not larger than small room. The eel began the attack, and the pickerel darted away. When near, the eel would sink underneath and snap upward at the fish, which soon became confused at the method of this attack. At last the eel caught hold of the pickerel's tail, and the pickerel began to swim furiously around, dragging the eel after it. The eel could not be shaken off, and would doubtless have been victorious, but at this stage of the combat some of the workmen began throwing stones at the combatants and killed both.—Golden Days.

Pretty Petticoats.

Pale blue and pink gingham make very pretty petticoats, if made with a couple of small flounces at the bottom, and they have the merit of being washable. "I must confess," said an old-fashioned lady the other day, "it seems perfectly dreadful to me that ladies are willing to wear petticoats that can not be put into the tub. Why, I am obliged to change my white skirts every day, so fancy the amount of actual dirt there must be on a silk one worn during the whole season! I was brought up to think that a gentlewoman might wear a shabby or an old gown, but never a soiled petticoat, and I shall never be reconciled to the present fashion."—N. Y. Tribune.

The Kootenai.

The mineral resources of the Kootenai region of Montana, Idaho and British Columbia are attracting more attention from practical miners than has been given to any mineral section of the West for many years. The extraordinary richness and extent of the ore beds in the territory tributary to Kootenai lake will bring about a large development this year. James F. Wardner, the well known mine owner, says Kaslo will grow to a city of 10,000 within a year or two, while Ainsworth and other towns will have corresponding growth. New steamers have been built to navigate the river and lake, running from Bonner's Ferry, Idaho, in connection with Great Northern trains. Bonner's Ferry, Libby Creek, Leonia and other points in the American Kootenai are full of activity, and 1893 will see them gain rapidly in population and wealth.

Capt. Alex. Greggs, of Grand Forks, N. D., has commenced running his new steamer "The City of Ellensburg," on the upper Columbia river, from Wenatchee, Wash., in connection with Great Northern trains, to Lake Chelan and Okanogan points in North Central Washington. The Lake Chelan country is attracting much attention from farmers and fruit raisers, while the mineral and timber resources of the Okanogan district are being rapidly developed.

—One man bought 17280 eggs, 2 bbls. of butter, and 4 coops of chickens one day this week. Who says Delano is not a good produce point? The cash brings 'em out.

—Mr. Everson, the Star Editor of our neighbor up street has gone off with a traveling troup. We don't know just when the balance of the feathers will fly.

—On Sunday evening Rev. Davies delivered a sermon concerning I. O. O. F. ism. A number of the members of Delano lodge, and of the Rebecca lodge were present.

—We understand that Riley Sturman had the misfortune to loose one of his valuable mares recently; she becoming fast in some way in the barn and dying before help arrived.

Supper will will be served from 5:30 P. M. to 7:30 P. M. The entertainment to begin at 8 o'clock. Tickets for either supper or entertainment will be 25 cts. each or 40 cts. for both. —The old Bird up street appears to be suffering considerable concerning our "Iron" bridge. Don't worry any more Ignatius. You can't remedy it now. It was a mean, low, contemptible piece of business, to be sure, but it went, and the iron bridge, at this writing is carrying people across as safely as one built on the old piling at a saving of several hundred dollars could do. Be a little more careful of your methods and you will have less to haunt your declining days. There, now! Don't worry any more. But be more careful in future. Take our advice. Don't get up schemes to vote for bonds to be disposed of to innocent purchasers, in order to make them good! Don't sit at a school election with "yellow" tickets and "white" ones in order to carry your points! Don't inject the word "iron" into places where it doesn't belong! Don't go Sundays into saloons! Don't, when running for Councilman straighten yourself up on the sidewalk and say "I wish there was a saloon open and I'd take a drink of beer, law or no law." Don't when retiring from the Council blow, in your paper, about how we did so much; and how we are all out of debt; and then, a few months later, growl about the new council not paying bonds you helped make. Don't be everlastingly doing wrong things and you will find less opposition among respectable and law abiding citizens. Be a good deal more careful what you publish and some of our best citizens will not so frequently be heard to say "some more of Gutzwiller's lies," Be honest, truthful and upright in your ways and we apprehend you will rest better. And have less cause to complain of the average citizen opposing your plans, whenever they are worthy objects of support.

—If you need lime, call on John Coolen. 27.

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

The following item was handed us for publication and we give it room that school officers may, at least, be led to look up the law passed this winter, before they enter into any contracts for school books, or they may have to pay for a lot of books from their own pocketbooks:

To the school district officers of Wright county.

Take warning and not be hoodwinked or misled or bulldozed into buying school books from traveling agents even though they be recommended by our worthy county supt. of schools? You don't know what they might do, a certain book agent traveling through this country came to me and asked the following question: Would Mr. F. H. Lindsley county superintendent's recomendation be good among the officers of the school districts throughout the county? Now why did he want to find out how Mr. Lindsley stood, and how much his recommendation is worth? It looks as though there might be a small African in the fence corner.

ABOUT LINEN MAKING

An Irish Manufacturer Who Thinks America the place for It.

James Girdwood, of ihe firm of Girdwood & Company, linen manufacturers, Belfast, Armagh and Newtownards, arrived in Minneapolis yesterday and is staying at the West hotel. Mr. Girdwood is an enthusiastic believer in the linen manufacturing future of America. There is no reason in the world, he says, despite all the talk of the foreighers about bleaching process, etc., why the same linen imported from Ireland and sold to American consumers at fancy prices, should not be made in any flax growing district in America after a few years.

"There is nothing at all in the statements that linen fibre can not be properly bleached in this country." said Mr. Kirkwood to a JOURNAL man this morning. "A very small percentage of the linen made in Ireland is grass-bleached. The manufacture has got beyond all that, and we now manufacture our own ozone of the necessary quality, instead of depending on nature for it as formerly. There are no hand looms. Everything is done by the most perfect machinery, and that machinery can be handled just as well in this country as in Ireland. The Irish manufacturers are simply waiting for more stable tariff arrangements than now exist before they establish branch manufacturies in America. It is not so much an objection to the present tariff law that prevents anything of this kind being done, as the fact that the continuance of any law in this country is so very uncertain. President Cleveland mav give us raw material free, which being done, would result in the immediate establishment of Irish linen mills in this country to supply the American tra de, provided that any guarantee could be given the manufacturers that they would not be harrassed by continually changing tariff legislation,

"If a permanent act could be passed admitting raw material, the linen manufactursng industry would at once become established in this country, for there are dozens of the biggest manufacturers abroad waiting for just such a chance to supply their American trade. As the tariff now stands it does not effect the foreign manufacturer of linens, but the American consumer who has to pay the 35 to 50 per cent duty imposed?"

"Could the American-grown flax be used in the manufacture of such grades of linen as are imported from Ireland?"

"Well, not at once. I think it would be ten years in fact before the farmers in this country would learn to raise flax for the fibre instead of for the seed, but if we establish a factory in New York, say, with the privilege of importing raw material free of duty, we could import all our fibre from Europe at a cheaper rate than we could pay freight on Western grown flax to the place of manufacture. Irish flax today is a fable. There is not enough flax grown to supply one sixth of the demand of the home factories, and all our finest linens are made from the fibre grown in other countries. Teere is an idea, too, that it would be necessary to import foreign loom hands to run the machines. This is all nonsense. I am sure that I could go out in Minneapolis today and pick up 100 men who know how to run one of our looms. Taking into consideration that labor here would cost 20 per cent more than it does abroad, we should still be able to supply the country with a much cheaper article of precisely the same quality as is now imported and sold at high prices. Of course there are grades of linen made in our factories, the result of study and long experiment, which could not be made in America in the next ten years, but in the medium grades of goods we could effect a great cheapening.—Minneapolis Journal.

Cleveland was Right.

A truer thing was never uttered than one of Mr. Cleveland's sayings during his former presidency: "no matter what I may do, no matter what Congress may do, the only power that can raise the Indian is the power of Christianity." The only power that can raise any people in the power of Christanaity. Education may train and develop the intellectual forces but it does not affect the heart. Cultured Greece was the worst Greece. Polished France was the most ignoble France. Culture permeated by Christian influence from Christ-filled harts brings intellect under the power of the noblest ambition the broadest and deepest humanitarianism and the highest purity known to history. And educated people may be debased but a Christian people, educated cannot be corrupt.—Methodest Herald.

The Chinese Exclusion Act.

The Methodist Episcopal Preachers, meeting of San Francisco has passed a series of ringing resolutions condemning the "Chinese Registration Act," in which they justly set forth.

1. That this bill is unjust, working great and almost unbearable hardships to thousands of Chinese now in this country by treaty rights.

2. That these Certificates of Registration will be no adequate protection to the Chinese against a distorted and violent public sentiment whose taproot is race prejudice, but rather affording opportunity for repeated arrests, annoyance and expense and imprisonments.

3. That the bill is an outrage on the common manhood of the chinese, degrading them at the bar of humanity.

4. That the whole force of this bill falls upon the Chinese now residing in United States, leading quiet and peaceable lives, and not upon those who are seeking to enter the country unlawfully.

5. That China has always shown a favorable attitude toward this nation, and that she is ready to so-re-adjust her treaty relations to the United States as to give efectual protection against Chinese labor. We therefore most earnestly and respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to repeal this Registration Act of May 5, 1892.

This action has been offered to all the daily newspapers of San Francisco, but they are so under the influence of the hoodlum element that not one single line has yet been published.

The Methodist Preachers of San Francisco appeal to the country at large to remonstrate against the enforcement of this infamous bill.

THE TOPER'S SONG.

BY JOSEPHINE POLLARD.

There's a song the toper loves to hear,
'Tis sweetest music to his ear,
At morn or noon, by day or night,
It ever gives him fresh delight;
'Tis the glug, glug, glug
Of the whiskey-jug!

He hears not though the wife may plead;
To love and duty gives no heed;
In vain the children cry for bread;
The only sound that's in his head
Is the glug, glug, glug
Of the whiskey-jug!

Once he was honest, good, and kind,
To noble, manly ways inclined;
But now to shame and honor dead,
From home and happiness he's led
By the glug, glug, glug
Of the whiskey-jug!

Deceived be this beguiling song,
On downward track he speeds along,
And soon among the lost appears,
Where mingled with the demon cheers
Is the glug, glug, glug
Of the whiskey-jug!

To the Public.

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION, CHICAGO, March 30, 1893.--To the Public: Because of many misrepresentations and misstatements relative to Exposition management and affairs being in circulation through the press and otherwise, both in this country and abroad, and in reply to many letters of inquiry or complaint touching the same matters, it seems advisable that some official statement regarding them should be made to the public. Therefore I respectfully ask that the widest publicity be given to the following facts:

1. The Exposition will be opened in readiness for visitors May 1.

2. An abundance of drinking water, the best supplied to any great city in the world, will be provided free to all. The report that a charge would be made for drinking water probably arose from the fact that hygeia water can also be had by those who may desire it at one cent a glass.

3. Ample provisions for seating will be made without charge.

4. About 1,500 toilet rooms and closets will be located at convenient points in the buildings and about the grounds, and they will be absolutely free to the public. This is as large a number in proportion to the estimated attendance as has ever been provided in any exposition. In addition to these there will also be nearly an equal number of lavatories and toilet rooms of a costly and handsome character as exhibits, for the use of which a charge of five cents will be made.

5. The admission fee of 50 cents will entitle the visitor to see and enter all the Exposition buildings, inspect the exhibits, and, in short, to see everything within the Exposition grounds, except the Esquimau Village and the reproduction of the Colorado cliff dwellings. For these as well as for the special attractions on Midway Plaisance a small fee will be charged.

6. Imposition or extortion of any description will not be tolerated.

7. Free medical and emergency hospital service is provided on the grounds by the Exposition management.

8. The Bureau of Public Comfort will provide commodious free waiting-rooms, including spacious ladies' parlor and toilet rooms in various parts of the grounds.

H. N. HIGINBOTHAM, President.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

LITTLE THINGS.

BY LAURENCE C. HODGSON.

Only a gentle word
Spoken to one who is sad;
Yet the magic of that kind thought
Has made that poor heart glad.

Only a kindly smile
Given to one in pain;
But that ray hath been to a weary soul
Like the sunshine after rain

Only a little sacrifice
Made for another each day,
Will sweeten and bless our lives, and smooth
Many a stony way.

THE Keely cure for drunkenness is said to be about to go into the hands of a New York Syndicate. If the empire city cant beat Chicago otherwise she proposes to buy her gold cure and let her citizens die drunkards or pay her for the privilege of using the cure. We expect that the Syndicate will never be able to make so much out of the treatment as Keely has.

Bucoda M. E. Church Prospering.

From a newspaper clipping from the state of Washington we take the following concerning our former pastor;

"Sunday, April 9th was a red letter day for the M. E. Church of Bucoda. In the morning the pastor, Rev. W. H. Wilson, preached from the words, "Occupy till I come." At the close he received one by letter, twenty-four from probation into full membership, and baptised one little girl. This was an old fashioned Methodist meeting, and it was good to see the official members march along the line, shake the hands of the new members and welcome them into the church. The interest seemed to intensify as the day advanced, and the Epworth League held the fort until evening, when the pastor preached, so the people say, the best sermon since his advent among us, his text being, "And he was speechless." The choir is one of the strong features of this society, and bids fair to be able to compete with any choir in these parts. At the close of the service there were received into the church as full members two of our towns-men, and so the good work goes on. Last week we should have given a report of the Easter services held the previous Sunday, but neglected so to do. They were well attended. In the morning Mr. Wilson preached a missionary sermon, and the congregation responded in cash and subscription to the amount of $58. In the evening the Sabbath school gave a concert. Speaking and singing were enjoyed by a large audience, the crowning feature being the song by little Roby Case and Nerna Mead entitled, "Asleep In a Manger." The two girls were dressed in white, and looked like little angels. Great credit is due Miss Nellie Wilson for the way in which these little ones were trained, they being members of the kindergarten. A collection taken after the concert increased the amount raised in the morning $12, making a total for the day in cash and subscription of $70."

Washington, April 28.—A plan for suspending the sugar bounty without waiting for the slow action of Congress has been suggested to President Cleveland, and may be adopted. The plan consists in a simple order from the secretary of the treasury to his subordinates to draw no more warrents and make no payments on account of sugar bounties. Such action in a single test case would be sufficient to carry the matter to the courts and secure a decision from the supreme court of the United States upon the question whether the payment of gratuities to private individuals out of money received by taxation upon the people was within the power of congress under the constitution. President Cleveland will probably ask Attorney General Olney for and opinion as to whether bounties are constitutional, and whether it is within the power of the executive to test the question by refusing payment.

And whilst Engaged in above said fight

Nor content by taking an Eye this treacherous shell in passing by took my Eye Brow Clear of the bone and left me as unconscious as a stone burning a blister of Crystal Clear

I hope with that Eye to see the day

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 28, 1893.

Hurrah for the democratic administration! It has proven itself to be the master, not the servant, of Wall Street, and the goverment still lives, and the Treasury continues and will continue to pay out gold to all who may desire it for Treasury notes. A greater financial triumph was never achieved by any administration. It marks the beginning of a new era, in which the President of the United States and his Cabinet will dictate our national financial policy, instead of having it done from Wall Street as it has been done already too long for the good of the country. The Wall street crowd invited the knock-down blow they received. Seeing that bankers all over the country were following the lead of those of the South and West in furnishing the Treasury with gold the Walll streeters got together and formulated a proposition in which they agreed to furnish the Treasury with from $30,000,000 to $50,000,000 in gold, but the proposition had a string tied to it in the shape of a proviso that bonds should be issued for their gold. Other bankers turned their gold into the treasury without question, because of their confidence in the goverment, which they thought in need of the gold to tide over the temporary difficulty but the Wall street Shylocks wanted their pound of flesh in the shape of interest on the bonds to be issued before they would turn loose the gold lying idle in there vaults. It did not take President Cleveland and the Cabinet three minutes to formulate an indignant refusal, which was wired to New York. Later, another proposition less exacting was received, but it also was promptly rejected. It must by this time be evident to even the most obtuse observer that the financial motto of this administration is, "No Wall street domination."

The present condition of the Treasury is, under the circumstances, satisfactory, and the offers of gold continue to be freely made as they have been for the past week it is believed that there will be no necessity for the issue of bonds, and even if the demand for gold shall continue to increas, the reserve fund, at present intact, will be drawn upon to meet it until it becomes certain that it will be exhausted before bonds will be issued. President Cleveland and Secatary Carlisle are both fully determined that no bonds shall be issued until it shall have been fully demonstrated that nothing else will furnish the relief needed, and many believe that if that shall be shown the matter will be sumitted to Congress at an extra session, before bonds are issued.

Secretary Hoke Smith in the only member of the Cabinet in the city and he has returned from New York, where the entire Cabinet and the president and the other members of the Cabinent except Secetary Lamont, who is compelled by private business to remain their for several days, will go direct from New York to Chicago, to take part in the opening of the Worlk's Fair. Secretary Smith had to miss the trip to the World's Fair because of some pressing Indian business that demands his immediate attention.

The secoud chapter in the investigation of the Weather Bureau opened with a stormy row between those two good republicans, Prof. Harrington, chief of the bureau, who is being investigated, and Assistant Attorney General Colby who is conducting the investigation. The evidence taken up to this fully bears out one of the charges—that incompetent employees were retained after the chief of the bureau knew they were incompitent

Congressman Caruth, of Kentucky, carries a very broad smile just now. One of the reasons of the unusual breadth of that smile was the selection of his brother, Geo. W. Caruth, editor of the Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette, to be U. S. Minister to Portugal.

Among the other important Presidential appointments made this week were those of ex-congressman McKinney, of N. H., to be Minister to Colombia; ex-Congressman Thompson, of Cal., to be Minister to Brazil; ex-Congressman Wiley, of N. Y. to be Counsul at Bordeaux, France, and the following well-known gentleman to be Goverment directors on the Union Pacific Railway Company: Mr. Henry F. Dimock, of N. Y.; Hon. Don M. Dickinson, of Mich.; Mr. J. W. Doane of Ill.; Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, of Va.; and Mr. Joseph W. Padock, of Nebraska. No more appointments will be made until after the President's return from the Worlds Fair, which will be next Tuesday night, unless the present programme is changed.

Nearly all of the prominent officials went over to New York this week to see the international naval review, the largest affair of its kind that has ever taken place in American waters, and they are all glad they went, for they saw what none of them will probably ever see again.

CORRESPONDENCE

INIEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

And Nathaniel said unto him can there any good thing come out of Nazareth, Philip saith unto him, come and see. From the lakes of the north to RioGrande, and from the hills of New England to the valleys of the West is heard the voice of lamentation on account of cold, stormes, cyclones, floods, etc. The lateness of the season is somewhat discouraging to the farmers and others too. The ground is so full of water in many places could not get a team on the field without getting them mired down. Think farmers will have to combine or form a trust, same as other industries do, and put up prices.

The lakes and streams are higher than they have been for many years. And some places the roads are almost impassable. Should this kind of weather continue much longer there will be homesteads to take in this part of the country: or, pre-emption rights to be had and land obtained at government prices. But I feel there will be a way out of all these difficulties yet.

Today is the final opening of the World's Fair, at Chicago. All the big moguls of America and Europe will be present to participate in the great event,

There is a new Post Office in south part of Independence, on Minneapolis and Watertown road, called Lyndale, J. C. Johnson, P. M.

Some of the Independence people are talking of visiting the World's Fair during the summer. Would advise every one who contemplates going to take out a life insurance policy.

Early vegetables will be quite a treat this year when we get them.

Enoch Cleveland, of Maple Plain, cousin of Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, was present, and got in some hard licks against Shaver. He was with Miss Ella Meek, the strongest of Shaver's supporters, and he told the writer that he had the big Irish girl "almost persuaded" to desert the erring ex-assistant when he left her. Mr. Cleveland denounces Superintendent Lewis' text book project as a scheme to rob the tax-payers in the interest of some publishing house that will pay Lewis well for his services. Lewis says the teachers who are opposing him are doing so because they want to act as agents for some other houses.

HENNEPIN COUNTY SCHOOLS.

The April session of the Hennepin County Teacher's Association was held in Curtiss Hall, Minneapolis, last Saturday.

Long before the appointed time for calling the meeting to order the teachers congregated in the hall and discussed in an informal but earnest way the two topics which have been agitating the minds of the people of the county for months past—the re-appointment of Shayer and the proposed scheme of Superintendent Lewis to supply the schools of the entire county with a uniform series of text books, to be selected by himself and a committee of teachers of his own choice.

Shayer's lieutenants moved industriously about among the teachers all the morning, calling this one and that aside for a moments discussion of the much agrivated question. The general opinion of the teachers seemed to be that Shayer's retention in the office, after his rejection by the commission ers and in defiance of such a pronounced public sentiment against him in the county, among people of all parties and creeds, was ill-advised and not for the best interest of the schools. Shayer got no encouragement whatever at this meeting to continue his fight with the commissioners, or in other words, with the people. The letter which Shayer and Chowen (Shayer's Uncle and Commissioner Egan's predecessor) wrote to Representative Wilson, imploring him to secure, if possible, the intercession of the Legislature in Shayer's behalf, because four of the commissioners were Roman Catholics, was discussed, and a very strong suspicion prevailed that Lewis himself had instigated the letter, but had acted his part under cover, that he might be in a position to make a sweeping denial, if the letter happened to be made public and any one ever ventured to say that he inspired it. His artfulness in the Pribble case was recalled and naturally occasioned, in a large measure, the suspicion that rests upon him in connection with this nefarious letter. The teachers had lost confidence in him, and when he proposed his text book scheme, and called for a general expression, not one spoke favorably of it. Several of the best teachers did, however, argue against it and seemed to carry conviction to the minds of most of the teachers, as the after gossip very clearly indicated. It will be very hard for Lewis to get the endorsement of the teachers to anything hereafter, on short notice. They are all on the lookout for him now. Shaver resigned before the close of the day. Those who had been fighting him held a conference during the noon intermission Mrs. Beede was the unanimous choice of all present for the place and it was proposed to communicate with Lewis at once with a view to having her appointed but some thought the commissioners might not wish to confirm her. Hon. Edward Egan was sent for, and he stated that in case Lewis saw fit to appoint her she would be confirmed at once by a unanimous vote of the commissioners. Then there was a doubt expressed that Mrs. Beede would consent to serve under such a man as Lewis. But a friend of hers, one of the most prominent educators in the state, who was present at the conference, took it onto himself to propose Mrs. Beede for the place, and went at once to communicate with the superintendent. Lewis would not appoint her and assigned no reasons other than that he had heard a little silly gossip about her.

A New York daily paper taking up the idea conveyed in Flammarion's exciting novel, "Omega: The Last Days of the World." has interviewed a number of the leading men in all professions as to what they would do if science were to perdict tomorow that the end of the world would arrive within the next thirty days. The answers are various and curious, and heighten the interest which is felt the second part of Flammarion's great novel, which appears in the May Cosmopolitan. It is a question which everyone will find interesting to ask of himself: What would you do if within six weeks the end of the world were certain? Probably no novel which has ever appeared in an American magazine has been more eleborately illustrated by more distinguished artists. Laurens, Saunier, Vogel, Meaulle, Rochegrosse, Geradin and Chovin all contribute to the explanation of the text.

A clever story of another kind is that of the new English novelist, Gilbert Parker, in the same number. "American Society in Paris is an aritticle of an other kind, but one which will interest all who have had occasion to make even a short residence in the French capital. The Cosmopolitan scores a sucess in producing in its May number almost simultaneously with the daily papers, an elaborate description of Professor Gray's marvellous invention, the Telautograph, which reproduces the handwriting, or the work of the artists simultaneously, thousands of miles distance from the place where the writer or artist is sitting. Mr. Howells' purpose in "The Traveller from Altruria" is month by month becoming more evident, and is now receiving wide attention at the hands of the critics all over the world.

To the Public.

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION, CHICAGO, March 30, 1893.—To the Public: Because of many misrepresentations and misstatements relative to Exposition management and affairs being in circulation through the press and otherwise, both in this country and abroad, and in reply to many letters of inquiry or complaint touching the same matters, it seems advisable that some official statement regarding them should be made to the public. Therefore I respectfully ask that the widest publicity be given to the following facts:

1. The Exposition will be opened in readiness for visitors May 1.

2. An abundance of drinking water, the best supplied to any great city in the world, will be provided free to all. The report that a charge would be made for drinking water probably arose from the fact that hygeia water can also be had by those who may desire it at one cent a glass.

3. Ample provisions for seating will be made without charge.

4. About 1,500 toilet rooms and closets will be located at convenient points in the buildings and about the grounds, and they will be absolutely free to the public. This is as large a number in proportion to the estimated attendance as has ever been provided in any exposition. In addition to these there will also be nearly an equal number of lavatories and toilet rooms of a costly and handsome character as exhibits, for the use of which a charge of five cents will be made.

5. The admission fee of 50 cents will entitle the visitor to see and enter all the Exposition buildings, inspect the exhibits, and, in short, to see everything within the Exposition grounds, except the Esquimau Village and the reproduction of the Colorado cliff dwellings. For these as well as for the special attractions on Midway Plaisance a small fee will be charged.

6. Imposition or extortion of any description will not be tolerated.

7. Free medical and emergency hospital service is provided on the grounds by the Exposition management.

8. The Bureau of Public Comfort will provide commodious free waiting-rooms, including spacious ladies' parlor and toilet rooms in various parts of the grounds.

In Lapland dress fashions have not changed for 1,000 years.

New York was the first city incorporated in the limits of the United States. Its charter was dated 1664.

A ton of gold is worth $607,709.21, of pure silver, $37,704.84; $1,000,000 in gold weighs 3,685.8 pounds; of silver, 58,929.9 pounds.

In the five or six months of the year during which the sardine fishery lasts something like 600,000,000 of these little fish are caught off the coast of Brittany alone.

Gov. Pattison of Pennsylvania has appointed five women as notaries public, his first nominations under the new law regarding that office. One of them is Miss Hills, manager of the Harrisburg Telegram.

Wee Hun Penk, who was cook in a mining camp only three years ago, is no longer wee in the financial sense. He owns the whole of one and half of another important mine in Arizona, and is reputed to be worth at least $3,000,000.

The leading physicians of New York announce that we are to have no cholera this summer to speak of. There may be a few scattering cases, but no epidemic. Rather reassuring, but it is just as well to keep right on cleaning up. The doctors' guesses are based upon that hypothesis.

Two twin brothers, Darius and Cyrus Cobb, of Boston, who are 59 years old, look so much alike that their own children often mistake them. They married sisters. Darius is a sculptor, and Cyrus is a painter. William Hunt, the artist, once styled them "Serious" and "Delirious."

At the world's fair electricity is to wash and iron clothes, act as waiter by running a dummy from kitchen to dining-room, heat water for dish washing, cremate the garbage, run the sewing-machine, and by the aid of the phonograph repeat the pieces played by Paderewski.

The oldest house in the United States is an adobe structure that stands in Santa Fe, N. M., itself the oldest seat of civil and religious government on American soil. The house in question was built before the Spanish conquest, and it is traditionally reported that Coronado lodged in it in 1540.

In an address Prof. Charles Eliot Norton, of Harvard, speaking of James Russell Lowell, said: "He and I were friends for more than forty years. We used to see each other almost every day, and I do not remember ever hearing him say anything which ever gave pain to any other human being."

The Connecticut legislature has passed a bill prohibiting all forms of pool-selling and gambling on games of chance, horse racing and the like. An attempt was made to exempt racing associations and agricultural societies, but there was a large majority against it. The Nutmeg state appears determined to live true to its old-time reputation as the land of steady habits.

A curious plea is made by Harper's Weekly for the man who gets drunk and is sentenced to imprisonment with common criminals. It thinks the disgrace thus incurred often sends such men on the downward path, whereas they could be saved if they were committed to a "drunkards' colony." Perhaps so. But if a man really wishes to avoid the disgrace, he can do so by not getting drunk.

Mrs. Beazley, a Philadelphia woman, invented a cooperage machine which turns out thousands of perfectly finished barrels every day. She is also the inventor of a life-raft which may be tossed into the sea in any shape, but will always right itself instantly and float safely. It contains pockets which the sea cannot enter, that are always filled with water and provisions for use of the shipwrecked.

Tennessee reports a round dozen of elopements in a single week. This is the season of which Tennyson wrote: "In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love." If he had lived in Tennessee he would have included "a young woman's fancy," also. And he might have used some word more expressive of the truth than "lightly." For they are going it quite heavily "way down in Tennessee."

The latest report by the director of the United States mint gives the following as the total production of gold by all the mines in the world for the last three calendar years: 1890, $113,149,600; 1891, $120,518,800; 1892, $130,816,600. These figures indicate a steady increase in the production of gold, the gain for the last year being 8¼ per cent. Of this increase for 1892 one-fourth part was from the mines of Australasia and the rest from South Africa. The product of the latter reached the total of $22,069,578 for last year, which is about equal to that of Russia, and second only to the United States and Australia.

The proud position of jailer of the Kent county jail in Rhode Island has been an hereditary honor of the family of Smith since before the revolution. About twenty years ago there was a break in the main line of succession, and the guardianship had either to pass into some other hands than those of a Smith or be committed to a woman—Miss Evelyn Smith. As there was no Salic law to bar the young woman, she became jailer, after slight opposition. She is an ideal jailer. She has a splendid physique, and a refractory inmate would have to be of Sampson-like proportions to give her any trouble.

The microphone is to be developed on a large scale at the world's fair. By its aid sounds well-nigh audible to people 100 feet away will be distinct and unmistakable in the ears of those separated from them by ten times that number of miles. The melancholy, monotonous ripple as it laps against the beach will awaken by its sound memories of the far-away coast. The services of the harmless, necessary fly of obtrusive tendencies will be impressed for the exhibit. He will take his walks abroad and make more noise by his tread than a newly-elected alderman when he first enters the council chamber.

LATER NEWS.

The world's fair was formally opened the 1st. The weather was damp until a moment before the exercises began. President Cleveland's address was very brief. As he was concluding the final ntence, his eyes wandered to the table hat was close at his left hand. Upon this was the button, the pressure upon which was to start the machinery and make the opening of the exposition an accomplished fact. It was an ordinary form of Victor telegraph key, such as is in use in most telegraph offices, except that it was of gold instead of steel, and a button of ivory instead of rubber. As the last words fell from the president's lips, he pressed his finger upon the button. The audience burst into a thundering shout; the orchestra pealed forth the strains of the Hallelujah chorus; the wheels of the great engines in machinery hall began to revolve; the electric fountains in the lagoon threw their torrents toward the sky; a flood of water gushed forth from the McMonnies fountain and rolled back again into the basin; the thunder of artillery came from the vessels in the lake; the chimes in manufactures hall and on the German building rang out a merry peal, and overhead the flags at the tops of the poles in front of the platform fell apart and revealed two gilded models of the ships in which Columbus first sailed to American shores. At the instant President Cleveland pressed the key the men at the ropes at the foot of each of the great flagstaffs laid hold with a vim. The monstrous American flag in a balloon-like wad at the top of the center pole broke forth and broadened out in the air, while at each of the poles at the corner of administration building stout men hauled aloft the great banners upon which were respectively blazoned the arms of Castile and Aragon. The center banner was that of the United States, and the others represented the colors of old Spain. Simultaneously from every flagstaff upon all the buildings of the White City, bannerettes representing various nationalities were broken forth to the air.

AN AWFUL BLAST.

It Sweeps Through the Territory of Oklahoma — Towns Almost Wiped Off the Earth's Face—At Least Seventy-Five Persons Killed and a Large Number Injured—Several Deaths by a Cyclone in Texas.

Oklahoma City, O. T., April 27.—Two distinct cyclones, a terrific hailstorm and a waterspout combined to wreak awful destruction in the newly-built towns in Oklahoma Tuesday night. It is reported that seventy-five human lives were sacrificed. It is positive that forty were killed, while several were fatally and scores seriously injured. The damage to property is in estimable.

The names of the killed, so far as known, are:

Nathan Banks, wife and two children, William Broughton, Rev. John Cole, Smith Ellis, Miss Finney, Annie Heddins, Edward Johnson, Mrs. William Mahoney and four daughters, Miss Nunsinger, James O'Malley, John O'Conner, John O'Conner, Sr., wife and three children, John Peary, wife and seven children, Mr. Plemores, Mrs. John Rooney, Mr. Johnson and family of four persons. There were forty injured so far as known.

Orders for thirty-one coffins have been received here and at Norman, and supplies have been telegraphed for from other points. The brunt of the storm was laid upon the prosperous little town of Norman, on the Santa Fe railroad, about 20 miles south of here. At that point thirty-one people were killed, dozens injured and the town almost completely destroyed.

Farther on the towns of Downs and Keokuk Falls fared but little better. The towns were nearly devastated and scores of people injured fatally and otherwise, though the loss of lives here, if at all, will not be as serious as at Norman.

The house of J. O'Connor, near Moore, was destroyed, and O'Connor and his wife and three children and five neighbors who had sought shelter in the building were crushed to death. The frame house of Nathan Banks was torn to pieces and he was killed, while others of his family of six were badly injured, three of the children and Mrs. Banks fatally. The home of Henry Dyer was demolished.

West of Norman eight houses were demolished and five people badly injured. East of the stricken town two men and two women were killed.

At Downs twenty or more people were hurt, but none killed so far as known.

In Guthrie little damage was done, bat 7 miles west of there three houses were swept away and one man killed.

In Pottawattomie county thousands of dollars of damage was done and a number of people badly injured, while the town of Keokuk Falls is reported swept away.

The Peary family lived in a substantial farmhouse southwest of here and all were seated in front of the hearth when the storm came. They had no warning and the entire building was lifted with its weight of occupants and smashed on the ground 80 yards away. When the search party found it Wednesday morning the mother, father and seven children were dead, but one wee infant 10 weeks old set up a wailing. It lay on a mattress unhurt. Mrs. Maroney was a near neighbor to the O'Connors and the Pearys. Her body, with those of her four little girls, were hauled from a pond Wednesday morning. They were mangled horribly.

All through this section are many cyclone caves. To these the people fled, and hundreds saved their lives by doing so. On the farm of Nathan Banks, however, the cave, which was built with a high dirt dome, was completely uncovered and the place filled with fine gravel. Banks died of suffocation from this gravel and his little child was buried under it.

Two Chickasaw Indians who were on the open prairie were found completely denuded and with limbs broken. They will live to tell their story.

Cattle and horses were found 20 miles from the places where they were owned. One horse was discovered impaled on a telegraph pole above the cross arms.

Eight miles northeast of here Mrs. Henry Johnson, the wife of a Swedish section boss, was out of doors when she saw the storm coming. She could not raise the lid of her storm-cellar, and, in her hurry, she grasped her two little boys and ran into a pond with them. The storm sucked the pond dry and left the woman and her charges unhurt.

Of all the escapes reported, however, that of a farmer by the name of Dyer was the most remarkable. Dyer's entire family was sick. He lived with his wife and three children in a frame story and a half house, which was picked off its foundation and carried 25 feet. His invalid wife was in bed and with her was an infant. Although the furniture was turned topsy-turvy Mrs. Dyer and child were safely deposited in the bed clothes without even a severe jolt.

At Langston, a negro town about 12 miles from Guthrie, thirty houses were carried away and fourteen people killed. The negroes are panic-stricken.

Gainesville, Tex., April 27.—A death-dealing cyclone swept down in Montague county, 30 miles west of here, Wednesday night. The storm struck 2 miles east of Bonita, a small railroad town, and utterly destroyed everything in its path, demolishing houses, twisting down trees and snapping off every telegraph pole in its path. The house of a farmer a few miles from Bonita was strewn for a mile around and the man killed outright. Three of his children were blown into a well and all of them were drowned.

Sunday Opening Referred.

Jackson Park, Chicago, April 27.—Sunday opening of the world's fair came up in the meeting of the national commission. A resolution looking to that end was introduced by Commissioner King, of Iowa, and after much debate referred to the judiciary committee. The members of this committee are opposed to Sunday opening, and this it is thought ends the matter.

To be government directors of the Union Pacific Railroad company: Henry F. Dimock, of New York; Don M. Dickinson, of Michigan; J. W. Doane, of Illinois; Fitzhugh Lee, of Virginia; Joseph W. Paddock, of Nebraska. Otto Doederlin, of Illinois, to be consul of the United States at Leipsic.

Floods in Southern Illinois.

Mascoutah, Ill., April 26.—The recent heavy rains have caused the Kaskaskia river to overflow. Below Queenslake the stream is 2 miles wide, and several hundred acres of farming land are under water.

DOWN BROADWAY.

A Magnificent Parade of Soldiers and Marines of Many Nations Is the Closing Feature of New York's Columbian Celebration.

New York, April 29.—Remarkable as was the gathering of foreign men-of-war in our harbor to participate in the naval review, still more remarkable was the spectacle presented on Friday morning. The uniformed forces of foreign nations, armed and accoutered as for battle, marched in our streets.

Gov. Flower rode at the head of the procession. A platoon of mounted police cleared the way. The governor was followed by details from the United States army, and then came the admirals in carriages. The foreigners were escorted by officers of our own navy.

Following the carriages came the first division, consisting of United States sailors and marines. Commander White was chief of brigade and Capt. W. Spicer commanded the marines. These were from the Charleston, Chicago, Yorktown, Concord, and Philadelphia, marching in the order named and resplendent in their showy dress uniforms. They were led by the Marine band. In the second and third and fourth battalions were Uncle Sam's blue jackets from all of his ships in port.

The second division was the one that interested the crowds on the street more than any other. It contained the sailors of the visiting fleets and the marines of Great Britain and Holland, the only nations represented beside our own who have marines. First came the troops of her majesty the queen. There were, officers and men, 650 all told. Capt. Hamilton of the Blake was in charge of the battalion.

Besides the British marines, the Russian vessels sent 330 men and fifteen officers. The battalion was in charge of Commander Steman and was in three companies. The Hollanders from the Van Speyk came next. There were forty marines. Germany followed on the heels of France with 120 men under command of Lieut. Mayer, of the Kaiserin Augusta. Next came the Italians, headed by their band. Lieut. Lovera was in command and four jaunty midshipmen acted as aids. There were 100 men in line. The Spanish admiral sent no men ashore. Each body of foreigners was recognized by flags carried by color sergeants, and the crowds cheered them all, giving the Germans and Russians the heartiest welcome.

After the first visitor came the national guard of the state of New York. Brig. Louis Fitzgerald and staff rode at the head. The naval reserves had the right of line and made a good appearance in their white duck suits. Next to them were Massachusetts naval reserves. The signal corps of the First brigade followed. Then came the national guardsmen.

The column moved into Fifth avenue from Forty-second street and down Fifth avenue to Washington square, where a turn was made in front of the Memorial arch through Waverly place to Broadway. The march down Broadway was a continued ovation to the foreign visitors. The admirals in carriages and the blue jackets on foot were cheered and saluted with waving flags and handkerchiefs. At City Hall park Gov. Flower left the column and with Mayor Gilroy and other city officials and visiting officers reviewed the column from the grand stand in front of the city hall.

THIRTY BURIED AT ONCE.

Kansas City, Mo., April 29.—There was a general funeral in the southern part of Oklahoma territory Friday. Thirty bodies were interred at once. A grief-stricken crowd was present. Desolation was on every hand. An unknown child, badly mangled but still alive, was found on the prairie in the Chickasaw Indian nation. Its leg is broken in six places and its body horribly bruised. It is supposed the child was carried many miles by the storm.

Plenty of evidence of the circular motion of the storm is left, for in several places trees were blown down toward the northeast, and 200 yards away trees are uprooted in a directly opposite direction. Such fenceposts as remain standing in the path of the storm are bent at angles of 45 degrees, and in one place, near O'Connor's farm, only seventeen posts remain to mark a line of wire fence a mile long.

A bundle of twisted iron the size of a man's head was found, and it proved to be the big wheel of a hay rake with the tire blown off and the wire spokes rolled up around the hub. The axle of a new wagon, with the hubs intact, but the spokes missing, was also found.

Dead jack rabbits are found on the prairie with the hair all blown off their bodies and hundreds of chickens are tangled in barbed wire that lies all over the prairie. In every case the chickens are absolutely without feathers except on the tips of the wings. Many dead birds of all kinds have been picked up, as well as small pigs, calves and colts.

There is said to be a mortgage on the place of $2,000.

Bound to Die.

New York, April 29.—Benjamin Buchanan, 70 years old, who for the last thirty-five years had been an officer of the supreme court, cut his throat with a razor on the roof of his residence and then jumped into the street. He was instantly killed. Mr. Buchanan had been in very low spirits for some time owing to the fact that he was a sufferer from dyspepsia and dropsy.

Heavy Loss by an Overflow.

St. Paul, Minn., April 29.—The Red river overflowed its banks for 50 miles in Marshall county, Minn., and spread 5 or 6 miles into the country on each side. Many farmers lost all their stock and at least $100,000 damage was done

MINNESOTA NEWS.

The Game Law.

The state game and fish commission was in session at the capitol and attended to routine business only, and that necessary to begin the carrying out of the new law. No action was taken regarding the error in the law which has reversed the open and close season for aquatic fowls. As the law stands, it permits ducks, geese, brant, snipe and other aquatic fowl to be taken between April 24 and Sept. 1, whereas the intention of the law, as framed, was to prohibit it between those dates.

This feature of the law was one of the principal ones on which the passage of the bill was urged, and had the blunder been so much as suspected, the bill could not have been hauled through by a team of oxen.

The bill, as introduced by the commission, was all right, but owing to the omission of the word "except" in engrossing, the open and closed seasons are reserved. Gov. Nelson and Game Commissioner Andrus were aware of the error before the bill was signed, but the other provisions of the bill were of so much importance that it was deemed advisable to have it become a law, even with the error mentioned.

Commissioner Andrus states that the portion forbidding shooting in the proper season need not be enforced, while the desirable changes are secured. If advantage is taken of the technical error, the game commission is not without means of redress.

For the Fair.

The state world's fair commission met at the capitol. The appointment of Mrs. P. B. Winston, of Minneapolis, as a member of the committee on awards in the china exhibit, and Hon. Mark H. Dunnell, of Owatonna, as one of the jurors in the educational department, was recommended. The commission appointed Miss Mayer and Mrs. Power, of St. Paul, for the postoffice department, at the Minnesota building, and to do the stenographic work of the commission and in the bureau of information. These two appointments were a happy settlement of a hot contest for the place between these ladies, in which nearly all the members of the legislature were more or less concerned.

Of other matters, there was a long discussion of the location of the secretary's office, whether it should be in Chicago or in Minneapolis, Col. C. McC. Reeve desiring it to be maintained in Minneapolis, and such was the decision.

F. B. Wood, of Austin, was placed in charge of the bureau of information, and Maurice Hickman, of St. Paul, was elected messenger. Richard Jenkins, of Sherburne, was appointed watchman.

The matter of dedicating the building was considered at length and it was decided to have a formal ceremony about June 1, if satisfactory arrangements can be made. The governor and state officials will be invited to be present.

To Enforce the Law.

Mayor Sullivan, of East Grand Forks, has issued his mandate to the effect that the gambling fraternity must take a walk, and gambling places of every nature must close up at once. The new chief of police, Thomas Campbell, has orders to see that the new mayor's commands are executed. The fraternity have come to the conclusion that Mayor Sullivan means business, and are already packing up their outfits preparatory to departure. The mayor has also ordered the sporting houses closed up, and has plenty of assistance from the elements in enforcing the order, for the flood has driven out the occupants. Mayor Sullivan says the day has passed when the gambling fraternity can control the municipal government, and the respectable portion of the community are entitled to their rights. The city will no longer be managed for the benefit of the saloon element.

Suicided in Jail.

Officer Zalusky arrested a man in Minneapolis on a charge of larceny. He gave the name of John Grant at the central station, but positively refused to reveal his business or his residence. The next morning, as Jailor Bradley was making his morning rounds at 7:30 o'clock, he was horrified at seeing the prisoner suspended from the top of the cell with a rope made of his underclothing. He was immediately cut down, and an attempt made to resuscitate him, but Deputy Coroner Nippert ordered the remains taken to Connelly's morgue, where an examination was made. On the left arm there was found a deep hole which had been dug by the finger nails of the unfortunate man in an endeavor to cut the artery and bleed to death.

News in Brief.

Gov. Nelson confirmed the nominations of Labor Commissioner Powers for the appointments under the new labor law. W. A. Hammond is appointed assistant commissioner and the other appointments are as follows: Chief factory inspector, Frank Casserly, of St. Paul; assistants, A. Paul, of Duluth, and E. B. Mayo, of Minneapolis; deputies, Frank Valesh, St. Paul, and John Erkman, Minneapolis.

Carleton college, at Northfield, has received a pledge of $25,000 for the erection of a library building. The structure will probably not be erected this year, but next year. The building will be thoroughly fireproof throughout and a credit to the institution.

It is announced from excellent Catholic source that Papal Legate Mgr. Satolli will visit Duluth about the middle of June. About June 1 he will visit St. Paul and Minneapolis, remaining about ten days, when he will go to Duluth in J. J. Hill's special car, accompanied by Mr. Hill, Archbishop Ireland, Bishop McGolrick, who will be in St. Paul at that time.

Deputy Game Warden Farnham caught some infringers of the game law in Stevens county. They were all prepared to spear fish, but had not begun operations. They could not be prosecuted, but their outfit was destroyed.

A gasoline stove in the residence of Mrs. Jromewitz, Minneapolis, exploded. Burning gasoline flew over her in large quantities and she was badly burned about the face and body. A man of the same name was in the room and had his hands and arms burned. She will recover.

Over 30 publishers have filed 3,000 books with the department of public instruction under the new text book law.

Mrs. Reed, wife of the proprietor of the Parker house, Minneapolis, was fatally burned by an explosion of gasoline.

NOT A BOSTON GIRL.

I seal the letter, write her name—
It's very dear to me—
And then I add, beneath the same,
Two letters—M and D.

I see you smile in quick disdain.
You think of glasses, too,
And little curls. It's very plain
What "M. D." means to you.

But she is neither stern nor cold,
As you perhaps may think.
She's young and fair, not grim and old.
Nor does she scatter ink

On notes of lessons that are said
Before a learned class;
And from her dainty lips of red
No long orations pass.

The only studies that she reads
Are letters that I write;
The only lectures that she heeds
Are those that I indite.

You wonder how it all may be,
And do not understand?
She lives in Baltimore. "Md."
Means, simply, "Maryland."

A SHOOTING MATCH.

Story of the Love Affairs of Mary, Ben and Dan'l.

"I ain't much on the shoot, now," said the old man, as he tenderly hung his squirrel rifle on the deerhorn hooks over the door, "but when I was a youngster there wan't no man er boy in Poor Fork Valley that could shoot alongside of me. Narv a one," and the old man sighed heavily. "But," he continued, "this gittin' old knocks the edge off a man's eyesight, and makes his hand so trembly that he can't even take a drink of liquor without wastin' half of it; and as fer shootin' us old fellers might as well try to hit center with a maul at a hundred yards."

The visitor, to whom this conversation was addressed, made a few desultory and incongruous remarks, and the old man resumed his talk, pretty much as if nothing at all had been said, which it was mostly.

"I never got beat but once," he went on, with a good-humored reminiscent chuckle, "and that was by a feller that hadn't sense enough skeercely to go in out of the rain. Leastways that's what I thought when the match come off. He didn't live in my neighborhood, but he had a farm about twenty-mile furder up the Fork, and I had a habit of goin' up thar to see a mighty likely gal, that was darter to the man that owned the place next to the chap that beat me at the shootin'. The old man's name was Squire Higgins, and the gal's name was Mary. Mary's a purty name, and Mary was a purty gal. Nothin' on the Fork was a patchin' to that gal, and I wanted her bad enough to go up thar sparkin' about twict a week durin' of a mighty hard winter, when it was cold enough to freeze the knobs off a bureau. Mary kinder liked me, too. Liked me better-in' any of the other young fellers that was hangin' round, exceptin' Ben Wilkins, and it was neck and neck betwixt me and Ben. Ben was her neighbor, and the same feller I had the shootin' match with. I never could see how she stuck to Ben, he was so doggoned freckled-faced and sun-burnt and sandy-headed and ignorant-like and fooler than Thompson's colt, but you can't tell about a woman, and thar wasn't no goin' back on the solemn fact, that ef Ben didn't git out of my way I was never goin' to git the gal, and it was most nigh as certain that ef somethin' didn't happen to me, Ben wasn't goin' to git her neither. It was close runnin', mister, and the gal settin' on the fence, aggin' us on. That's another weakness woman has; I mean these young women that has her choice, like Mary Higgins. Wan't no danger of her fillin' a maiden's grave, even ef me and Ben both got put out of the way.

"One mornin' when I was on the road leadin' up the Fork, towards Squire Higgins' farm, I met Ben comin' down with a load of hay, and I'd been goin' to see Mary then for mighty nigh a year.

"'Howdy, Ben? said I, friendly enough.

"'Howdy', Dan'l,' said he to me.

"'Fair to middlin',' says I.

"'Goin' up to the squire's, I reckon?' says he, questionin'.

"'That's what,' says I, speakin' as if I had the rights to.

"'Mary ain't home,' says he.

"'Who said anything about Mary?' says I, gittin' red 'round the years.

"'The way you're go'in',' says he, with a grin.

"'What's that to you?' says I, not over polite, I reckon.

"'Nothin',' says he; 'but ef you want to see her, you'd better go down to mother's. She's down thar to a quilt-in'.'

"Ben grinned again and I got purty mad, but not enough to hurt anybody, and says I to him:

"'Ben Wilkins,' says I, 'have you got a gun?'

"'You don't want to fight, do you?' says he, backin' off kinder, fer I thought he was skeert, and mebbe he was.

"'No,' says I; 'but I want Mary Higgins.'

"'So do I,' says he.

"Then it cleared up a bit, and we both looked at each other sorter sheepish and grinned, fer before this we hadn't ever had no understandin'.

"'Now as we know what we want,' says I, 'we orter have it settled on short notice who's to git it, and ef you air agreeable we'll settle it to the satisfaction of all parties at intrust, as the lawyers say.'

"'How?' says he.

"'We can't both have her, kin we?' says I.

"'Not accordin' to law,' says he.

"'Ner no way,' says I.

"'I reckon not,' says he.

"'Then s'posin' we have a shootin' match fer her,' says I.

"'I ain't agreeable to that,' says he.

"'Fer why?' says I.

"'You air handier than me with a gun,' says he.

"'Some mebbe,' says I, 'umble enough, 'but I'll give you twenty-five yards advantage, and that'll about make it even.'

"Well, after talkin' fer half an hour er more, we fixed up a shootin' match, fer next day, on Ben's farm, fer he was skeert to go anywheres else, and I rid back home, and next forenoon I was on hand feelin' as slick as a whistle, fer I was gamblin' on gittin' Mary. Nobody was to know anything about our settlemint, and when I seed Ben, he was settin' on the fence, about a quarter of a mile from his house, with his gun acrost his lap, lookin' lonesomer than a cat in a rainstorm. Thar was an old frame barn standin' by itself in the field, and we went over to it to have a quiet place for the closin' arrangements. It had a pile of loose straw in it, and as we sot thar talkin', I seed a knot-hole in the plank about two inches acrost, and I ast him ef it wouldn't make a good enough mark with the straw inside to ketch the bullets. You see I was doin' the most of the engineerin', fer Ben was that shook up he didn't seem to know his head from a hole in the ground. He said he thought the knot-hole would do, so we went outside and it was like as ef it had been put thar a purpose.

"We stepped off a hundred yards fust, and druv a pin down, and then went on twenty-five yards and druv another, and me and Ben took our places. We was to shoot ten times apiece, me five and Ben five, turn about, and neither of us was to go nigh the other to flustrate him during the shootin'. I was feelin' in regular shootin' trim, and when I shot my five I knowed Ben was goin' to have to do some mighty tall shootin' 'er lose the gal. We went to the mark together and pegged up three holes, not half an inch from the knothole, and two bullets had gone smack through, leavin' no sign.

"Then Ben he took his turn, and I was shore I seen him shake when he sighted his gun, but he shot off his five, and we went up to see what he had done—and what do you think, mister? There wasn't the sign of a bullet hole anywheres!

"I looked at Ben and he looked at me.

"'You ain't shootin' very spry today,' says he, grinnin'.

"'You air,' says I, lookin' ugly and feelin' my holts on Mary slippin'.

"Next round I was dead sot on doin' my level best and I put three balls through the hole and scraped the edges with the other two.

"Ben was lookin' peakid, and I seed his knees wabblin', but he braced up and went back to settle who should have the gal, and it 'peared to me like as if he was takin' till Christmas to fire them five shots. He got it done at last, though, and we walked up to the mark kinder unsartin, both of us, but thar wasn't any need of it."

"Did you win?" broke in the visitor, in a high state of excitement and interest.

"Nary win, mister," chuckled the old man. "That sandy-headed, thumb-headed cuss had sent every one of his five bullets smack through the knothole and thar wasn't the sign of a scratch anywheres in sight.

"That ended it fer me, both fer shootin' and fer the gal, and I rid home feelin' like a saw log had fell on me butt end fo'most, and Ben went lopin' acrost the field tor'ds Squire Higgins'.

"About a month after the shootin' match Ben and Mary was hitched and I was to the hitchin' feelin' a good deal pearter than I did the day Ben beat me, an' gettin' some consolation out of a new gal, jist moved onto the Fork. But I couldn't quite git over Ben's beatin' me shootin'.

"Along about midnight, I had to go home, and as I started to git on my hoss, Mary followed me out on the porch.

"'Dan'l,' says she, kinder cooin' and soft like, 'you won't git mad at me ef I tell you somethin', will you?'

"'Of course not, Mary,' says I. 'Nothin' you could say or do would make me mad at you.'

"'Well, then, Dan'l,' says she, shakin' some, fer I was holdin' her hand and knowed, 'when you and Ben had that shootin' match fer me, Ben didn't have no bullets in his gun. They was just wads.'

"Well, sir, you could a-knocked me down with a splinter, and I got hot all over, but I shet my jaws down hard fer a minute and held in, thinkin' about them wads.

"'And he didn't beat me shootin', after all?' says I, feelin' mighty good over it, all at once.

"'No, he didn't,' says she, pattin' me on the arm like as ef she was my mother.

"'But he got you,' says I, droppin' back a peg er two.

"'Yes,' says she, 'but I put him up to it, Dan'l.'

"Then she smiled till I thought the sun was raisin', and I throwed my arms right 'round her and says I:

"'Mary,' says I, 'you've got more sense than Ben and me put together, pertickerly me, and I'm glad you've got the one you wanted,' and with that I jumped on my hoss and rid lickety split fer home, and when I got thar I jist hugged that rifle of mine as ef it had been Mary Higgins."

"Dan'l," called the old man's wife from the kitchen at this point, 'supper's ready."

"So air we, Lizzie," he said, rising.

The visitor looked at him inquiringly as he rose to accompany him supperward.

"Yes," smiled the old man, "she's the same that was the new gal on the Fork the night Mary and Ben got hitched."—W. J. Lampton, in Detroit Free Press.

MEXICAN SHREWDNESS.

The Story of the Purchase of an Old "Salted Hole."

"If anybody thinks the citizens of the Cactus republic do not possess their full share of Yankee shrewdness he is likely to become wiser, without growing wealthier, during a year's sojourn in Mexico," said a traveler, as he joined in the circle of bonanza kings who were talking pay-rock in a crowd where a St. Louis Globe-Democrat reporter was taking notes. "I went down there a couple of years ago to pick up a few fortunes in the mining district.

"At Chihuahua I became acquainted with an old greaser, who professed to be very fond of me. One day, when I had warmed his leathery old heart with pulque, he confided to me that he knew the location of an old Aztec mine of fabulous richness. It was situated upon a branch of the Yasqui river, on land owned by his brother, a wealthy rancher-o. It was from this mine that the Montezumas drew the bulk of their fabulous wealth.

"During the war waged by Cortez the mine was forgotten, and he (my companion) had fortunately discovered it. He had specimens of the ore, and it was fully seventy per cent. coin silver. Of course, I bit—bit ravenously. I set out for his brother's ranch next day, and reached it after a three days' ride. The old mine was certainly there, and it gave indications of being as rich as represented. I scraped together every dollar I could command and bought a third interest in it.

"Then I went to work to form a company to develop it. I did not work long, however. The first man I interviewed looked at me pityingly and remarked: 'So old Joe has caught another sucker, has he? My innocent friend, that old hole is salted. You could carry away every ounce of pay-rock within twenty-five miles of the place in a meal sack.'"

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Graham Cake: One cup sugar, one-half cup sweet cream, one cup flour (Graham), one teaspoon baking powder, two eggs. Bake in small tins, adding currants and chopped raisins. Makes nice cakes for children.—Detroit Free Press.

—Omelet Souffle: Grease a large baking dish with butter. Beat the whites of six eggs to a stiff froth; then beat the yolks, and add with half a coffee-cup of sugar and a squeeze of lemon juice; stir very quickly, heap into the dish, dredge with powdered sugar, and set in a hot oven until a light brown. Serve immediately.—Harper's Bazar.

—Beef Balls: The beef is seasoned as for sandwiches, and rolled between the hands into balls the size of marbles; place a plate in the oven or on the stove until hissing hot; polish with salt, so as to render it perfectly smooth; then having shaken off the salt, place the balls on the plate and toss until lightly seared. This is the most digestible and agreeable manner of preparing raw beef.—N. Y. Observer.

—Columbus Eggs: Take twelve hard-boiled eggs, peel off shells and cut the eggs in halves, cutting off a little piece from one end to enable them to stand alone; pulverize the yolks and chop fine some smoked tongue or lean ham, mix together and moisten slightly with a little fresh butter, season with pepper, salt and mustard to taste, fill the empty whites with this mixture. Press the two parts together to look like whole eggs and arrange on a platter.—Home.

—Rice Cups: Soak the rice all night in cold water, then strain it, and boil the rice in a little milk, so that it may be quite dry when done. Mash it fine, and while it is hot add a little butter, sugar and grated nutmeg to taste. Press the rice so prepared into small cups or ornamental tin molds; fill them full and press it solidly. When they are cold turn them out, place upon a dish, and pour an ordinary custard around them, and eat with sweetened cream.—Boston Budget.

—Hot Slaw: A nice way to use a dish of cold, boiled or stewed cabbage, is to first chop it fine, then add a couple of hard-boiled eggs, sliced or chopped. Prepare a dressing thus: Beat the yolk of one egg in a pint cup, fill it nearly full of cream or rich milk and pour in enough vinegar to make it as sour as liked. Heat to boiling, add the chopped cabbage and egg and let all simmer together for a few minutes before serving. Any seasoning liked may be added to the cabbage after it has been chopped.—Orange Judd Farmer.

—Cream Soup: A correspondent sends recipe for a cream soup which she says is very nice for invalids. Put in a spider a tablespoonful of butter; when it is melted add a small cupful of bread crumbs or squares of bread, and let them brown a little on each side. Stir the yolk of one egg and one cupful of milk or cream together and add it to the first ingredients; when this has come to a boil have ready the beaten white of the egg, with sugar added to taste, and spread it over the soup which should have been previously poured into the dish from which it is to be served.—Prairie Farmer.

A Palatable Soup.

It is a little trouble to make the following soup, but it is very nice; and, for the matter of that, there is nothing thoroughly excellent which is to be had without some troublesome effort. To begin with, make a couple of quarts of well-seasoned stock. Boil a quart of large Spanish chestnuts in their shells for about twenty minutes. When they are cool shell them and remove the thin brown skin. Put the nuts into a saucepan with enough boiling water to cover them and season with a teaspoon of sugar, one of salt and a part of the yellow rind of a small lemon. After they have boiled for a few moments take them out and rub them through a sieve. Add this puree to the two quarts of stock and boil slowly for a quarter of an hour, and then stir in a tablespoonful of cornstarch moistened with a little cold water. Stir in a tablespoonful of butter and send to the table very hot. Half of this quantity is quite sufficient for six persons.—N. Y. Post.

The Art of Refining Hash.

That maligned dish, hash, if carefully made and attractively served, becomes as dainty a dish as any set to our tables. It may consist of one kind of meat or several, but all must be freed from course, stringy fiber and gristle, and cut in very small bits. A cold chop, a bit of beefsteak, or chicken may be used when there is not corned or roast beef. Chop the potato and meat separately, and combine them in equal parts or in any proportion you choose. Season to taste with salt and pepper, and moisten accordingly to quantity with stock, cold gravy, or milk. Do not add too much liquid. Heat a saucepan, put in enough butter to prevent sticking, and spread the hash flat on the bottom. Cook over the fire long enough to brown the under side, then cover and set in the oven where it will cook slowly for fifteen minutes. When dishing, roll the hash like an omelet and garnish with parsley.—N. Y. Post.

How to Make Mealy Potatoes.

Pare the raw potatoes and let them stand an hour or so in a basin of water, to which a pinch of salt has been added. Boil quickly; when done drain off the water carefully, and replace the potatoes upon the stove in the same vessel in which they were cooked, to dry for five or ten minutes. When ready to serve take each potato and squeeze it gently, but not enough to destroy the form, in a dry napkin, and place immediately on the table. The squeezing in the napkin takes out all the water, and leaves the potatoes that were before wet and heavy, dry, mealy and delicious.—St. Louis Republic.

It Would Not Hurt.

Mrs. Cumso—Oh, what shall I do? I've spilled this ink all over my new dress. It never will come out.

Cumso—Oh, yes, it will. It's only indelible ink.—Judge.

—In denying a Chicago newspaper man an interview about his recent trip to Europe, Philip D. Armour is reported to have said: "I saw nothing new that I am prepared to talk about, and I have always made it a rule not to talk for the mere sake of hearing the sound of my voice. In fact, I have made money by keeping my mouth shut." This is doubtless a nineteenth-century business man's way of saying that silence is golden, and as Mr. Armour is one of the few living Americans who have been able to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear, the advice should carry weigh ELEVATED ROADS IN TRUTH.

Part of a Peruvian Line Is 15,638 Feet Above the Level of the Sea.

The highest point attained by a railroad in the United States is in the Rocky mountains, 9,027 feet above the sea. Trains on the Callao-Oroya line in Peru are now ascending to a height as far above the great elevation as the total height of Mount Washington. In other words when a train on the Oroya line enters the Galera tunnel to cross from the western to the eastern slope of the Cordilleras it is more than a mile higher above the sea than the loftiest bit of railroad track in this country. Some stretches of track in Mexico are also higher than any railroad in the United States. At present the Galera tunnel is the highest elevation attained by any railroad in the world. It was on September 28 last that the first train from Callao passed through the tunnel to the eastern side of the mountains. Twenty years elapsed after the line was started at the sea before the Cordilleras were conquered; and trains have scarcely a foot of level grade for 106 miles until they pull into the Galera tunnel, 15,638 feet above the sea, and emerge upon the eastern face of the Andes. If this were not the loftiest tunnel in the world it would still be conspicuous as a specimen of railroad construction. It was driven through the rock a distance of 3,856 feet. If a train happens to stop in the tunnel passengers can hear water from the vaulted roof pattering on the car tops. The melting of snow that crowns the mountain summit above it filters through to the excavation. Two channels are cut in the rock to carry the water out of the tunnel. One of them leads to the head stream of an Amazon tributary and the Atlantic; the other to the Rimac river and the Pacific.

It is doubtful if any other railroad for general traffic will ever be carried to so great an elevation. The surveys for the Pan-American railroad do not thus far indicate elevations at all approaching that of the Aroya line. It will be necessary here and there to pass from one valley to another separated by mountain ranges, but the highest points along the line will not be over 7,000 feet above the sea if the results of the preliminary surveys hold good. South America will always beat the rest of the world in elevated railroads. The South Peruvian line from Mollendo to Lake Titicaca attains a height of 14,641 feet, only 997 feet lower than the Galera tunnel. The remarkable Chilian railroad, now nearing completion, which, starting at Antofagasta, runs hundreds of miles northeast into Bolivia, has its highest point at Carcoto, 12,008 feet above the sea, and it is a noteworthy coincidence that the Trans-South American line from Buenos Ayres to Valparaiso is also said to be just 12,008 feet above the sea at its highest point. These results have been obtained by triangulation, but for ordinary purposes it may be as well to lop off the extra feet above 12,000, just as some geographers do in the case of Mount Everest. They say that the figure, 29,004 feet, given as the height of this loftiest of mountains implies a refinement of accuracy in measurement to which it is not entitled.—N. Y. Sun.

PECULIAR ODORS.

That most occupations may have their specific ordors we can understand. Mr. Monin sees nothing out of the way in saying of the famous Vidocq: "Place me in a crowd and there I will pick out from among a thousand a galley-bird by the smell alone." Chomel observed for six weeks a groom suffering from pneumonia whose sweat retained during all that lapse of time the smell of the stable.

In gout the skin secretions take a special odor, which Sydenham compares to that of whey. In jaundice the ordor is of musk; in oppilation, of vinegar; of sour beer in scrofula (Stark apud Hebra); of warm bread in intermitten fever (Heim); in diabetes when there is perspiration the smell is of hay (Latham), or rather of acetone (Picot), but according to Bouchardat, midway between aldehyde and acetone, being due to mixture, in variable proportions, of these two bodies. In cholera the odor is ammoniacal (Drasch, Parker); it is acid in what is called milk fever; sweet in the onset period of the plague (Diemerbroeck), or honey-like, according to Doppner, who observed the plague at Vetlanka (Lancet, February 1, 1879); acetoformic in rheumatism, particularly in the region of the engorged articulations (Monin); of new-plucked feathers in measles (rougeole); of new-baked bread in scarlatina; in small-pox the odor is that of the fallow deer; in typhoid fever it is that of blood (Beheler).

Frederic Berard goes so far as to say that, apart from the secretions, the cutaneous odor draws flies to a still living body. However, little noticeable it may be, it says death is near; a sweat having a cadaveric odor precedes death, says Boerhaave (Aphorism 728 of the editio princeps). Dr. Althaus tells us that Skoda hardly ever was led into error by this indication, and Crompton, of Birmingham, also laid great stress upon this as an important clinical symptom. But the smell given out at the death agony is totally different from the death odor; it is universally admitted to be specific, and it differs entirely from the odor of putridity.

It would be difficult to insure the exactitude or, at least, the practical value of all these assertions. But they suffice to show that there is ground in facts for the occult judgments of somnambules not only from the diagnostic, but also from the prognostic, point of view. Clearly disease is not bounded by the surface or body; it goes beyond it.—The Doctor.

A Plausible Excuse.

"Didn't you say six months ago that if Miss Meier wouldn't marry you, you would throw yourself into the deepest part of the sea? Now Miss Meier married some one else three months ago, and yet you haven't."

"Oh, it's easy to talk; but let me tell you it is not such an easy matter to find the deepest part of the sea."—Demorest's Magazine.

Why not, indeed?

When the Royal Baking Powder makes finer and more wholesome food at a less cost, which every housekeeper familiar with it will affirm, why not discard altogether the old-fashioned methods of soda and sour milk, or home-made mixture of cream of tartar and soda, or the cheaper and inferior baking powders, and use it exclusively?

STATISTICAL ITEMS.

LAST year 108,820 immigrants left German ports for the United States.

THREE-FIFTHS of the shoes worn in the United States are made in Massachusetts.

IT is estimated that the standing pine in Ashland county, Wis., will measure about 10,000,000,000 feet.

THE total recorded immigration to this country is 16,004,093, almost as many as the whole population of Spain.

IN manufacturing operations the average life of soap boilers is highest, and that of grindstone makers the lowest.

THE Irish spend $11 per capita, the Scotch $15.14 per capita and the English $19.16 per capita for liquors annually. These statistics are given by Rev. Dr. Dawson Burns, of London, who is a standard authority on temperance questions.

The Best Thing in Milk Pails is Pearline. That's the solid truth. You get them cleaner, and with less work and fuss, than with anything else you can use. It saves you so much that it's cheaper than the commonest stuff can be. Proof—the largest dairies and dealers use Pearline.

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man. Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.

Yours heartily,

The kind farmers and their families allowed them the privilege of the place, and some of them fed the tiny songsters crumbs, from their tables. How different this sounds from the announcement, in last weeks Eagle of a wheat buyer in in town who shot over 50 with his little gun. We learn that some of the school children picked up 54 of the little feathered dead not far from the nest of the bird with the noble name, and buried them all in one grave.

—Number 1, of the Daily Columbian, of the World's Fair city, arrived this morning. It is a good one.

—Attend the Supper and Concert at the City Hall to night, you will get the worth of your money and be giving it to a good cause.

—Read the Law Supplements accompanying this paper and see what our Legislature was doing last winter. And what new laws you must observe in your daily walks through life.

—We understand that "the whole Eagle force" the old Eagle and all the Eaglets called at the Great Northern depot yesterday to learn why their Law Supplements didnt come. She came out this week "Laws or no Laws'

—See the band Tournament advertisement. It would be doing the hansome thing for the ladies of Delano to have a good dinner for the Band boys from the county, in consideration of the music they are to give us on that occasion.

—Rev. Soares is to deliver his last Sermon on this work, on Sunday, at 10:30 at the Presbyterian church. Rev. Wright will be here the Sabbath following and introduce to the congregation their new pastor, Rev. S. S. Hilscher, of Chicago.

—On Sabbath morning banker Roosen was seen, in a pensive mood gazing forth upon the watery deep of the raging Crow, apparently calculating how long it would take a man to drown, or figuring out the profit and loss on some watered stock in the "Sousen Island," just South of the G. N. Railroad bridge.

—The old "Inkubus" up street tries hard to rile the waters all she can but if you notice she does not deny that the means made use of for obtaining a vote for an "iron" bridge at that time was a "low mean contemptible piece of business". It all happened too before his string to the Legislature broke.

—We are in receipt of a characteristic letter from our former pastor, Rev. W. H. Wilson, now of Bucoda, Washington, which will appear in the GAZETTE next week. We print this week an extract from a newspaper concerning his work and which shows him as interested as ever in his efforts to do good.

—Jos McNulty, of darwin, who has been attending the College of Physicians and Surgeons, at Chicago for several months, came home this week, having graduated at that institution. He is now a fullfledged M. D., and expects, to locate at Watertown this state. We wish him the best of success.—Litchfield Saturday Review.

—The S. S. Board, of the M. E. Church met at the parsonage on monday evening and elected officers for the Sunday School for the ensuing year as follows: Superintendent, Charles Hawker; Assistant Superintendent, Dr. T. J. Catlin; Secretary, Arthur Parsons; Treasurer, Mrs. C. H. Green; Librarian, Emery Cunningham; Organist, Mrs. Leon Frazee; Assistant Organist Miss Mable Parsons. The Sunday School is held at noon every Sunday.

—It is about time to take steps to organize for Celebrating Decoration Day. One by one the old veterans of the late war are passing away, but few remain to visit their comrades graves once a year and remember when they touched shoulders in the ranks for the defence of their country and to think of the near future when they too will be called to the great reunion in the hearafter. Let someone see to it that appropriate observance of the day is held in Delano.

—Our Post Office is still in the hands of the apointee of Benjamin Harrison, his successor not yet having been named. Some of our citizens are growing considerably anxious for a change. Letters haye been writen to Congressman Baldwin and answers received by several of our citizens, until he has quite enough, so that it is about impossible for him to answer all his correspondents. Unless they enclose postage stamps for postage stamps for answer we would not be surprised to find our Congressman supporting a bill to raise the pay of M. C's. Some seem to think Mr. Eppel should have the office, haying been so uncommonly well recommended in the first place by the citizens of Delano, and the democratic committee men. Mrs. O'Hair informs us that she is bound to get it in spite of the republicans and mugwump democrats while Charley Belt was in the field watching for chances.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION OF THE
General Laws of 1893
IN NEWSPAPERS.

Note by Secretary of State—This publication is made in accordance with section 43, chapter 5, of the General Statutes of 1878. As the appropriation is much less than the amount to which the newspapers would be entitled under the law, the secretary has been obliged to use discretion in the selection of the acts for publication in full. In the effort to give this publication the most useful form, the title of every general law is given, and the same is numbered by chapters as they will appear in the official book publication; and where the law is not given in full a synopsis is made, whereby in many instances a better knowledge of the law is obtained than if it had been published in full.

CHAPTER 2—H. F. No. 694.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota:

Section 1. That the governor be and he is hereby authorized, and it is made his duty forthwith to appoint by and with the advice and consent of the senate, seven suitable persons, one from each congressional district in the state, to act and be known as state capitol commissioners, who shall constitute a board to be known as the "board of state capitol commissioners," whose duty shall be to secure the erection of a new state capitol, according to the provisions of this act: Provided, however, that the governor shall be, ex-officio, the presiding officer of said board and shall have the right and opportunity to express his opinions and give his advice upon all measures or questions that may come before said board for consideration and determination, but shall not be deemed a member of said board, except for the purpose of presiding over their deliberations at their regular and special meetings, which shall be conducted according to the usual parliamentary rules. The persons thus appointed shall be subject to removal by the governor for cause, and should any vacancy occur in said board from death, resignation or otherwise, the governor shall fill the same by appointment, such appointment, however, to be subject to rejection or ratification by the senate at the first session of the legislature following such appointment.

Sec. 2. Each member of said board shall be entitled to receive his actual traveling expenses, and each member of said board, except the governor, shall receive the sum of five dollars per day for the time actually spent in the discharge of his duties under this act.

Sec. 3. Each of said commissioners, before entering upon the duties of his office, shall enter into bond in the sum of $25,000 with two or more good sureties to be approved by the governor, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duty under this act, payable to the State of Minnesota, and filed in the office of the secretary of state, and shall also take and subscribe the following oath, to be endorsed on said bond, and be administered by any one authorized to administer oaths, to wit:

"I, A. B., do solemnly swear that I will not, directly or indirectly, be interested or concerned, in any manner whatever, in the pieces or parcels of land or any of them, to be used as a site for a new state capitol building according to the provisions of this act, or in the purchase from the owners of any lands or buildings to be sold under this act; and I will not, directly or indirectly, be interested or concerned in any manner with any contractor or contractors or person or persons, for the erection and location of the said state capitol building thereon, or in the proceeds or profits growing out of the same, or any work or labor done thereon, or material furnished in the erection of the same; so help me God."

And should the said commissioner offend against the true intent and meaning of this oath, he shall, upon indictment and conviction, suffer all the pains and penalties of perjury; and in case of a violation of the conditions of the bond provided for, he shall be liable to action thereon in the district court of Ramsey county, and a judgment in favor of the state for such damages as may be awarded against the obligors thereto, by reason of failure of the principal.

Sec. 4. Within ten days after qualification as commissioners, the said board shall meet at the seat of government for the completion of their organization, and may elect one of their number vice president, whose duty it shall be to preside over the meetings of said board in the absence of the governor.

Sec. 5. The said board of commissioners shall appoint some proper person, not of their number, to superintend, under their direction, the erection of the state capitol as provided for in this act, whose duty shall be to see that the contract for the building is let, and they shall also appoint a secretary, not of their number, whose duty shall be by them prescribed. Such superintendent and secretary thus appointed shall each receive for his services a reasonable compensation, to be established by said board, and before entering upon the discharge of his duties shall take the oath prescribed by the constitution for state officers, and give bond for the faithful performance of the duties of his office in the penal sum of ten thousand dollars.

Sec. 6. It shall be unlawful for either of the said commissioners to be interested, either directly or indirectly, in any manner whatsoever in the location of said new capitol site, or in any contract, or part thereof, for the erection of said building, or for any work connected therewith, or for the furnishing of any supplies or material therefor, so as to receive any benefit therefrom, or the promise of any benefit therefrom, either by way of commission, rebate, bonus, division of profits, or otherwise; and any of said commissioners who shall violate this provision of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be subject to a fine not to exceed ten thousand dollars, and shall forfeit his right to, and be removed from his place on said board; and be found incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under the state; provided, further, that it shall be unlawful for said board of capitol commissioners or any member, officer or employment, any person in the supervision or superintendence of the building of said capitol, or of any work connected therewith, who is in any manner connected or interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract for the erection of said capitol building, or for the furnishing of any supplies or material therefor; and the said board of commissioners are hereby charged with the rigid enforcement of this provision of this act.

Sec. 7. There shall be transferred in each of the years 1893 and 1894 from the general fund to the credit of the board of state capitol commissioners the sum of five thousand dollars, and in each succeeding year after the year 1894 until the completion of said capitol building, not exceeding ten years, a sum equal to the proceeds of a levy of two-tenths of a mill upon the assessed valuation of the state, for the purchase of a site, or part thereof, and the erection and completion of a new state building in accordance with the terms and provisions of this act. Provided, that the total amount so transferred shall not exceed the sum of two millions of dollars.

Sec. 8. The board of capitol commissioners, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, shall proceed to select a plan for a suitable capitol building for the State of Minnesota, said plan to be secured by competitive contest, and the following rules shall govern the board:

First—The building shall be planned so that it can be properly built, with ample light and air, upon a lot surrounded by streets or open ground. The building shall be supplied with proper heating, lighting and ventilating apparatus, and with necessary sanitary arrangements.

Second.—The drawings required in the competition shall be as follows:

First—One plan of the cellar and each of the other floors.

Third—One longitudinal and one transverse section.

Fourth—One perspective view on the scale of one-fourth inch to the foot (with point of site three hundred feet nearest the point of the building) which shall be rendered with cast shadows in brush wash in monotone, black or brown.

Third—All drawings submitted, except the perspective, shall be drawn on a uniform scale of one-eighth inch to the foot; and all shall be executed in India ink on heavy white paper without shading or shadows. Door and window openings may be tinted in india ink to show glass. Walls and partitions may be filled in solid with india ink. No landscape or figures shall be drawn on elevations, excepting one figure to indicate the scale.

Fourth—All drawings submitted shall be either mounted on stretchers or heavy book boards, with white or tinted paper borders. No border lines or other framing will be allowed.

Fifth—The designs submitted shall be for a fire-proof building and one that can be completed at a cost, including site and all other expenses, not exceeding two million dollars.

Sixth—The drawings shall be sent to the board of capitol commissioners at St. Paul, Minn., and shall come with the real name and address of the architect or firm submitting the same distinctly printed or written on each drawing.

Seventh—There shall also be a type-written description designating the materials the author proposes using in the construction of building, and such other general information as cannot be shown on the several drawings hereto called for as may be necessary to accurately determine the cost of the building. No drawings or documents other than those herein called for will be received.

Eighth—Every design shall be excluded from competition as to which it appears that any attempt is made by its author to influence the decision of the members of the board or their advisors; or, if in any particular violates the conditions herein stated; or if it be found that its probable cost will exceed the limits herein named.

Ninth—From the designs furnished which conform to these conditions the board may select one to be the design of the new state capitol. This design shall be in the possession of the state, but shall remain the property of the architect or firm who made it, and shall not be used in whole or in part except said architect or firm is employed as architect and superintendent of the building according to the rules of the American Institute of Architects, except as to fees which will not exceed two and one-half per cent of the amount named in said bill; but said board may reject any and all plans and proceed anew until a satisfactory plan is secured.

One of these architects, who shall be a resident of the state, shall be selected by the board, the other by the Minnesota Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, and, with one of the members of the board selected by the board to serve them, shall form a committee to examine and recommend the most desirable plan.

Provided, however, that the commission shall not adopt any plan unless it shall first have received the endorsement of a majority of the committee provided for in subdivision ten of section eight and provided any plan shall have received such endorsement.

The architects on the committee provided for by this subdivision shall be subject to the provisions of section six of this act.

Four premiums shall be given to the aggregate amount of two thousand dollars, to be awarded to the designs adjudged to stand in point of merit; second, third, fourth, fifth, the accepted design to receive no premium other than the fee allowed by the board for designing and superintending the said building.

Eleventh—No design shall be received after the date fixed for submission of plans. All drawings shall be exhibited in public at least two weeks before the award is made.

All drawings shall be the property of the architects or firms submitting them and only used in whole or in part by agreement with and compensation to their authors. All rejected drawings shall be called for within thirty days after the decision of the competition, after which time the board shall no longer be responsible for them.

Twelfth—The board shall issue to all architects upon request a printed schedule of the requirements for the building, including a list of the number and approximate area of the rooms, and such other general conditions as are essential to clearly set forth the requirements of the building.

Sec. 9. No plan shall be adopted except upon detailed accurate specifications of the cost of supervision, labor, material and of other expenditures necessary for the erection and completion of said capitol building, including heating and ventilating apparatus, lighting and all other fixtures, nor until it shall be definitely ascertained that the entire cost of the same will in no event exceed the sum limited in the first section of this act; and it is understood that it is the object of this act to restrict the aggregate and entire cost of the capitol building and site thereof and all expenditures to be made or authorized by said board to this sum, and the board of commissioners appointed shall have this object in view, and all contracts awarded and plans accepted, shall be awarded and accepted only after the board shall be satisfied that the cost of the building when completed, shall not exceed this amount.

Sec. 10. The said board of state capitol commissioners, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, shall give due and reasonable notice to all parties interested, by sufficient publication in two daily newspapers of general circulation in the state designating a time and place when and where the board will receive sealed proposals to sell or grant to state of Minnesota land or grounds in the lots and blocks next to or immediately adjoining the block of land now constituting the site of the present state capitol, sufficient in area, together with the present capitol site and the intervening streets or streets, for the site of the new capitol herein provided for; such sealed proposals to be accompanied by a plat of the lands or grounds proposed as such site; the price at which the same will be conveyed to the State of Minnesota, and the terms and conditions upon which such conveyance will be made, and any other information that the board may deem desirable; and every such proposal to be accompanied by a bond in the sum of ten thousand dollars properly executed and signed by the party or parties making such proposal, and at least three financially responsible persons as sureties, conditioned for the faithful performance of such proposal in all its details. No proposals shall be received after the date designated in said notice for examining the same, and said published notice shall state that said proposals will be publicly opened and examined at a time and place in said notice named.

And at the time and place in said notice named the said board shall meet and then and there publicly open such sealed proposals and examine the same, and as soon thereafter as may be practicable shall go upon and view the lands or grounds described in every such proposal that shall conform in all respects to the requirements of said published notice and the provisions of this act, and shall thoroughly investigate the same to the end that they may be fully informed as to the merits of the different proposed sites.

Sec. 11. Said board are hereby authorized, after they shall have properly examined all such proposed sites to select and secure such a site for the capitol building of Minnesota, which shall include the present capitol site, as shall, in their judgment, be most advantageous to the state for the purpose contemplated in this act, and for that purpose said board are hereby authorized and empowered in the name and on behalf of the state to enter upon, purchase, take and acquire any lands and premises, public or private, that may be necessary, convenient or proper for the purpose of such site, or any part thereof, and in case the owners of such lands or grounds and said board cannot agree as to the value of the premises taken or to be taken for such use, the value thereof shall be determined by the appraisal of three reputable freeholders of the state of not directly or indirectly interested in the premises to be taken, and to be appointed on the application of said board by any judge of the district court of any judicial district of this state. And said commissioners shall their assessment of damages and appraise such premises and the respective estates and interests therein at their actual market value, and upon return into court of such appraisement and upon payment into the same of the appraised value of the premises so taken, said premises shall be deemed to be and shall become the property of the state, save as herein otherwise provided, all provisions of title 1, of chapter 34, of the general statutes of one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, so far as reasonably applicable, shall apply to and govern proceedings under this act.

Sec. 12. All labor, material, transportation, or construction required by the provisions of this act, as well as all job printing, advertising or other work which can be done under this act, shall be done and furnished by contract. The board are authorized to contract for the construction of the entire building by a contractor who may undertake the whole work, or the said board may divide the work into appropriate classes and make separate contracts as to either or them as may or may not seem to them to be for the best interests of the state; but in the event of separate contracts the total amount to be paid for the whole work, including the purchase or securing of the site, the plans, supervision and erection of the building and all expenditures of every nature to be made or contracted for by virtue of this act, shall not exceed said sum of two million dollars as aforesaid, nor shall any contract, or contracts, take effect until all of said work of erecting and completing said building shall have been contracted for, and said contracts shall be absolutely void if in the aggregate said contracts and expenditures to be made shall be for a sum so exceeding said sum of two million dollars. All lettings of the work exceeding in amount the sum of five hundred dollars shall be advertised in two daily newspapers of general circulation in this state for not less than thirty days, and shall call for sealed bids, accompanied by such security as said board shall prescribe. All contracts for material and labor shall be in writing, and shall be signedz by the contractor and the president or vice president of the board; in any cases where there are bidders and materials from other states, the preference shall be given, the quality and terms being equally favorable, to the bidders and materials within this state. Such per cent, not less than ten, as in the judgment of the board shall seem proper, shall be reserved from payments on the monthly estimates, on work contracted, until such contract, or the portion thereof to which such payments are by the terms of such contract made applicable, shall have been completed, inspected and accepted. All materials contracted for shall be of the best quality and so far as the said board are of the opinion that the same can be done consistently with the best interests of the state, preference shall in all cases be given to Minnesota material and labor, and the directions, plans and specifications of the work shall be executed by skilled and reputable architects, contractors, artists, mechanics and laborers.

No contract shall be made which shall bind the state to the payment of any sum until the same shall be by law made applicable thereto.

For the due prosecution of the work hereby committed to their charge the said board are hereby authorized to and shall employ such architects, mechanics and laborers as may be deemed necessary, and payment of all expenditures made in or in any manner connected with the securing of a site and erection and construction of said building and for the services of the members of said board, of the governor, superintendent and secretary and consulting architects, and for traveling expenses of the governor and members of the said board in the performance of their duties under this act, shall be made upon full and complete statements or accounts, which shall be made and certified to by a majority of the members of said board and approved by the governor; such statement of account shall then be laid before the state auditor for examination, and if found correct and in compliance with this act, shall be audited and shall be paid by the state treasurer, upon the warrant of the state auditor, out of any money in his hands for such purpose, such warrant to be drawn in favor of and to the order of the person or persons entitled to receive the amount therein named.

Sec. 10. Whenever there is no election of any state or county officers, or of the required number of members of the house of representatives or senate, or of representatives in congress, by reason of any two or more persons having an equal and the highest number of votes for any such office, or whenever an unexpired vacancy in any of said offices, which said vacancy is not otherwise provided for, the governor, within ten days after he is informed of such vacancy or failure to elect, shall issue a proclamation directing that a special election be held in the proper election districts or districts, on a day to be specified in the proclamation, not more than twenty days from the date thereof, to fill such office, and said election shall be called in the manner herein provided for calling elections. Sec. 13. The term "vacancy" or any equivalent phrase, as used herein, shall be deemed to mean such as exists when there is an unexpired part of a term of office without a lawful incumbent therein, or when the person elected or appointed to an office fails to qualify according to law, or when there has been no election to fill the office at the time appointed by law, and whether the vacancy is occasioned by death, resignation, removal from the state, county or district, or otherwise.

Sec. 14. Any state, county political division or district from which the nomination is made.

Provided, however, that the number of signatures required in the case of any state officer shall not exceed two thousand.

Sec. 36. No certificate of nomination shall contain the name of more than one candidate. No person shall join by certificate signed by electors in nominating more than one nominee for the same office, unless more than one person is to be elected thereto, in which event he may sign as many certificates as there are officers to be elected.

Sec. 37. Each signer, at the time of signing, shall be sworn by some proper officer.

Sec. 38. If any certificate of nomination shall contain the name of more than one candidate for any office to be filled, neither name shall be printed as a candidate for such office.

Sec. 39. If any elector shall join in nominating by petition more than one nominee for any office to be filled, there being but one such office to be filled, such person shall not be counted as a petitioner for either nomination.

Sec. 40. In case a vacancy occurs from any cause after nominations have been made, as heretofore specified, such vacancy may be filled at any time before the official ballot is posted by filing with the proper officer a certificate of nomination in form and substance as hereinbefore provided, containing the name of the person substituted to fill the vacancy.

Such substitutional certificate shall be executed by the chairman and secretary of the proper committee of the party making the nomination, the vacancy of which is to be filled, under such directions and regulations as the convention shall have specified, or in case none have been specified, then under the direction of the proper state, county, district or city committee, as the case may be.

Sec. 41. In case of the death, removal or resignation of any candidate, after the printing of such ballots and before such election, it shall be lawful for the campaign committee of the state, district, county or other political organization of which such candidate was a member to make a nomination to fill such vacancy, and the chairman of said committee may provide the boards of election in each election district in which such candidate is to be voted for with a number of adhesive pasters, containing only the name of such candidate, at least equal to the number of ballots provided each precinct, but no pasters shall be given to or received by any one except such board of election from such chairman, and it shall be the duty of the said board of election to put such pasters in a careful and proper manner and in the proper place on such ballots before either of said board shall sign his initials thereon.

When said vacancy shall occur before the official ballots shall have been delievered by the secretary of state, the county auditor or the city clerk, as provided in this act, said adhesive pasters may be delivered to either of said officers, as the case may be, and shall by them be delivered with said official ballots, and boards of election, on receiving the same, shall put said pasters on said ballots as hereinbefore provided.

Sec. 42. In case of members of congress, judges of the district court and all other candidates voted for in any district or division smaller than the entire state, but larger than an entire county, whenever such candidate is nominated by any convention of delegates, as specified in this act, it shall be the duty of the president and secretary of such convention to file a certificate, as therein specified, with the county auditor of each county in the congressional, judicial or other district for which the nomination is made.

Whenever any such nomination in any such district is made by a certificate of nomination by petitioners, such original certificate containing the original signatures shall be filed with the county auditor in the county where the candidate resides, and the said auditor shall certify to as many correct copies of the same, if presented to him, as there are other counties in the district, and the said certified copies shall be filed within the proper time with the county auditor of each said county in the district, and shall be authority for such auditors to place the name upon the blue ballots.

Sec. 43. Whenever it shall appear by affidavit presented to any judge of the supreme or district courts of the state that an error or omission has occurred in the printing of the name or description of any candidate on official ballots, or that any other error has been committed in printing the ballots, or that the president or secretary of any convention have failed to properly make or file any certificate of nomination, or that the name of any person has been wrongfully placed upon said ballots as a candidate, such judge shall, immediately, by order, require the officer or person charged with the error or neglect, to forthwith correct such error, or perform his duty, or to show cause forthwith why such error should not be corrected or such duty performed. Failing to obey the order of such judge shall be contempt.

Sec. 44. Names must be handed to and filed with the secretary of state, to be placed upon the white ballots, in accordance with the provisions of this act, on or before the fifth Saturday preceding the day of election.

Names must be handed to and filed with the county auditor to be placed upon the light blue ballots on or before the third Tuesday preceding the day of election.

Names must be handed to and filed with the city clerk or other proper officer to be placed upon the tinted-red ballots on or before the second Saturday preceding the day of election.

In all cases provided for in this section the secretary of state, county auditor, city clerk or other proper officer shall immediately give or send the person handing in any name or names to be placed upon the ticket an acknowledgment thereof, upon the blank day which it is received and shall file and preserve such certificates, and they shall be subject to inspection like other records. But no filing of any name shall be deemed complete until the necessary fee shall be tendered the proper officer, when the name is handed or presented to him as aforesaid.

Sec. 45. The secretary of state and county auditors and city clerks shall respectively place upon the several ballots printed by them the name of each candidate for office, who shall have been nominated as hereinbefore provided, and whose certificate of nomination has been presented within the time specified, and in pursuance of the fee prescribed by law which shall be as follows:

For each name tendered to be placed upon the white ballot, fifty dollars to be received by the secretary of state and by him paid into the state treasury; for each name tendered to be placed upon the red ballot, two dollars to be received by the city clerk and by him paid into the city treasury; for each name tendered to be placed upon the blue ballot, ten dollars, to be received by the county auditor and by him paid into the county treasury. Provided, that when any candidate is nominated for the same office by more than one political party, the name after party by whom he was first nominated shall be given the first place following his name, and

Provided, that where the person whose name is to be placed upon the blue ballot, is to be voted for in more than onecounty, as in case of members of congress, judges of district courts, etc., then the fee shall be twenty dollars, and shall be divided among the several counties as nearly equal as may be, and the portion due each, paid at the time and in the manner as provided for single counties.

Sec. 46. Every township, city and village clerk at least fifteen days before the holding of any general election and twenty days before the holding of any special election, shall give public notice of the time and place of holding such election and the hours during which the polls will be open by posting in three public places in every election district three notices each containing a list of the officers to be elected at such election, one of which notices shall be posted in the place of holding the election: Provided, that no failure of the clerk to give such notice as aforesaid shall invalidate an election.

Sec. 47. The election shall be held in each election district at the place where the last preceding election was held, except as hereinafter provided; but, if in any town a vote is taken to hold it elsewhere, the next ensuing election shall be held at the place designated by such vote.

Sec. 48. The municipal council of every incorporated city or village shall, by ordinance or resolution, appoint the place of holding the election in each election district in said city or village. When the place shall not be so designated the election shall be held as near as may be, at the place of holding the then last preceding election, subject, however, to change or removal before the opening of the polls, as elsewhere provided in this act.

Sec. 49. When in any township the supervisors shall have divided the same into two or more election districts, as provided in section three of this act, they shall designate the place for holding the election in each of such districts, at least thirty days before the day of election, and shall give notice thereof by posting proper notices in three public places in each election district at least twenty-five days before the day of election, which said notices shall contain the designation of the boundaries of and the place for holding said election in the election district wherein the same are so posted.

Sec. 50. The township supervisors shall be judges of election in the election districts in which they reside, unless all of said supervisors shall be members of one political party and reside in the same election district, in which event not more than two shall so serve as judges of election, to be determined by lot if not otherwise agreed upon.

But no supervisor shall be required so to serve as judge of election, and if he declines so to serve he shall so notify the town clerk in time for the appointment of judge of election as in this section provided. Whenever it shall become necessary to appoint one or more judges of election by reason of the disqualification or unwillingness of one or more supervisors to serve or by reason of the division of the township into two or more election districts, said supervisors shall on the first day they meet for registration appoint the same, and shall give notice thereof by posting proper notices in three public places in each election district at least ten days before the day of the election.

Sec. 51. The city council of all incorporated cities, and the municipal councils of all incorporated villages, which constitute one or more separate election districts, shall, at least twenty-five days before any election, appoint three qualified electors of each election district of said city or village, as hereinafter provided, who shall be judges of election in their election districts, respectively, and who shall appoint two qualified electors of their election districts as clerks of election. Provided, that members of any village council, in villages having but one election district, and not included in any township election district, shall be judges of election, however to the qualifications and restrictions provided for township supervisors in like cases.

Sec. 52. Two qualified electors in each election district shall be appointed by the judges of election therein to serve as clerks of election for such district, except that in towns the town clerk, and in villages having but one election district and not included in any township election district, the village clerk shall serve as one of the clerks of election in the election district in which he resides. No more than two judges and one clerk of election shall belong to the same political party, and no person shall be eligible or serve as judge or clerk of election unless he be a qualified voter within the election district in which he sits, nor unless he can read, write and speak the English language understandingly, nor if he be a candidate for any office.

Sec. 53. At least thirty days before any election in any city or in any incorporated village having two or more election districts, the local committees of the several parties participating at the last preceding election may furnish to the city council, or other appointing authorities, a list of qualified electors for the various election districts to act as judges of election, which lists shall be certified to by the several secretaries of such committees. Said judges of election, in cities and incorporated villages, shall be selected from the lists submitted by said local committees in the following manner:

One for each election district from each of said lists so recommended by the said different parties; the first to be selected from the list submitted by the party polling the largest number of votes in said city or village at the last preceding general election; the second from the list submitted by the party polling the second largest number of votes at the last preceding general election; the third from the list submitted by the party polling the third largest number of votes at the last preceding general election.

If either of the local committees of the three parties respectively polling the first, second or third largest number of votes at the last preceding general election shall fail to furnish a list as hereinbefore provided, and a list shall be so furnished by the committee of the party polling the fourth largest number of votes at said preceding election, then one judge shall be selected from said list.

In case there are not three lists submitted to such council, or other appointing authorities, then said council, or other appointing authorities, shall select one from each list submitted as above provided; and said council or other appointing authorities shall themselves select the remaining judge or judges, but in no case shall more than two of such judges belong to the same political party.

Sec. 54. If either of the judges of any election district in the state shall fail to attend at the time and place appointed for correcting the lists of registers, or holding an election, or if either of said judges be a candidate at such election, or refuse to act as judge, the qualified electors of such election district present shall elect viva voce some qualified elector of said election district, of the same political party as the judge so absent (if only one judge in attendance belongs thereto, but otherwise if of another party) to act as judge instead of such such judge so absent, disqualified or refusing to act.

If any clerk of election be absent, disqualified or refuse to act, the judges of election shall appoint some qualified elector of the same political party as the clerk so absent, disqualified or refusing to act, in place of such clerk.

Before any judge or clerk of election enters upon the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by this act, he shall take and subscribe to the following oath, to wit:

"I, A. B. (judge or clerk of election as the case may be), do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will perform the duties of judge (or clerk) of election (as the case may be) according to law and the best of my ability, and will studiously endeavor to prevent fraud, deceit and abuse in conducting this election, so help me God."

Said oath so taken, subscribed and certified, shall be annexed to the said list or register provided for in this act.

If there be no person present authorized to administer oaths, then the judges of election may administer to each other, and to clerks, the oath provided.

Said judges and clerks shall, prior to the opening of the polls, constitute a board of registration, and subsequent thereto shall be known as the board of election; and all registry lists by them made or used shall be headed or prefixed substantially in the following form, to-wit:

"List of qualified electors in the election district composed of the ..... (town, ship, village, ward or precinct, as the case may be) of ....., in the county of ....., State of Minnesota, for an election to be held in the said election district on the ..... day of ....., eighteen hundred and .....

All registry lists shall contain the names of electors in separate groups, to be inserted in alphabetical order, according to the first letter of the surnames of such electors, each letter of the alphabet to form a group, and not more than one group to be on any one page of such register; and each group shall be separately numbered (commencing each with number one), in the order of registry.

Section 55. Except in cities having over twelve thousand inhabitants, the board of registration in each election district in the state, at least twenty days before any election, shall make a list or register of the names of all persons who are entitled to vote in their respective districts at such election, which list shall contain the surnames of such persons in alphabetical order, and their places of residence.

Three copies of said list shall, at least ten days before such election, be posted in each election district, together with a notice of the time and place when and where the board will be present for the purpose of making corrections in said list.

The judges of election on the Tuesday next preceding election, from the hour of nine in the morning until the hour of four in the afternoon of said day (and in cities containing a population of over two thousand and less than three thousand inhabitants, on Tuesday two weeks preceding the election and on the Tuesday next preceding such election, from nine o'clock in the forenoon until nine o'clock in the afternoon of said days), shall be present at the place appointed for the holding of such election in their respective election districts, for the purpose of making such corrections in said list or register.

In making such corrections said board of registration shall enter upon such lists the additional names of all persons properly shown to be entitled to vote in that election district at such election, and erase from said list or register the names of all persons properly shown not to be entitled to vote in that district at such election.

The said board, on first making out said list, shall consult the poll lists used at the last preceding general election in their election district, and shall place in said list or register the names of persons whom they know, or can with reasonable diligence ascertain, to be entitled to vote at such election in their respective election districts.

Section 56. In cities having less than twelve thousand inhabitants either of the judges may administer the following oath or affirmation to persons appearing for registration:

"You do solemnly swear (or affirm) that you will fully and truly answer such questions as shall be put to you touching your place of residence, place of birth and your qualifications as an elector, and your right to register and vote under the laws of this state."

Section 57. At the end of each day's registration in all election districts (except in cities having over twelve thousand inhabitants) the board shall carefully compare the registers and make them to correspond and agree, and the judges of election shall sign their names at the end of their list on every page of such register, so that no new name can be added without discovery, and shall also sign and attach to such register a certificate in substance as follows:

"We, the undersigned judges of election in the .....district of the ..... of ....., in the State of Minnesota, do jointly and severally certify that at the general registration of electors in said election district, on the .... day of ....., 18....., there were registered by us in said election district the names which in this book are inserted, and that the number of registered and qualified voters was and is the number of ....., of whom ..... are males and ..... females." (Number to be written in figures and words.)

Section 58.—The board of registration shall make or cause to be made a duplicate of such lists or registers, so that there shall be two registers or lists at every election.

Section 59. The population of the various grades of cities shall be determined by the last officially promulgated state or national census.

Sec. 60. At such ensuing election in all districts (except in cities having over twelve thousands inhabitants) any person offering to vote, whose name is not upon the list and register at the opening of the polls, who produces evidence which satisfies a majority of the judges that he has the qualifications of an elector in said district, and is entitled to vote at such election, but whose name has been omitted from said list or register, then the name of such person shall be added to the lists or registers, and he shall be allowed to vote, but not in any other event; and said person shall not, unless the judges require it, be obliged to make the oath or produce the evidence provided by section ninety-eight of this act, but if required by the judges he shall do so.

Nor shall the vote of any person be rejected whose name is upon said lists at the time of opening the polls; provided that if evidence satisfying a majority of the judges be produced showing that the name was registered by mistake, and that the person so offering to vote has not the qualifications of an elector in said district, and is not entitled to vote at said election, then the name of such person shall be stricken from said list and he shall not be allowed to vote.

But in all such cases an entry shall be made opposite to each name added to or stricken from said lists or registers after the opening of the polls.

Sec. 61. The board of registration, in all election districts throughout the state, in determining the residence of any person for the purpose of ascertaining who are qualified electors, shall be governed by the following rules so far as they are applicable:

1. The place shall be considered and held to be residence of a person in which his habitation is fixed, without any present intention of removing therefrom, and to which whenever he is absent he has the intention of returning.

2. A person shall not be considered to have lost his residence who leaves his home to go into another state, or county in this state, for temporary purposes merely, and with the intention of returning.

3. A person shall not be considered to have gained a residence in any county into which he comes for temporary purposes merely, without the intention of making such county his home.

4. If a person go into another state, with the intention of making it his residence, he loses his residence in this state.

5. If any person remove to another state with the intention or remaining there for an indefinite time as a place of residence, he loses his residence in this state, notwithstanding he entertains the idea of returning at some future time.

6. The place where a man's family resides shall be held to be his place of residence; but if it be a place of temporary establishment for his family, or for transient purposes, it shall be otherwise.

7. If a man have a family fixed in one place and he do business in another, the former shall be considered his place of residence, unless the latter be a boarding house, has taken up his abode with the intention of remaining, and whose family refuses to reside with him, shall be regarded as a citizen and voter where he has taken up his abode.

8. The residence of a single man shall be where he usually sleeps.

9. The mere intention to acquire a new residence without the fact of removal, shall avail nothing; neither shall the fact of removal without the intention.

10. No person employed temporarily in the pineries for the purpose of cutting timber for saw logs or railroad ties, or even in the construction or repair of any railroad, canal, municipal or other work of public nature, shall acquire a residence in any election district into which he came for that purpose, so as to entitle him to vote therein, but this provision shall not be held to extend to station agents and section men, who permanently reside in such election district.

In any question that may arise as to the right of any person in the employment of any railroad corporation or employed upon public work, as aforesaid, to be registered or to vote in any election district, it must first satisfactorily appear to all the judges of such election that the said party is an actual bona fide resident of said election district, and not there for temporary purposes merely, and the mere affidavit of such person shall not be received as conclusive as to any fact necessary to entitle him to vote.

Any person being a permanent inmate of any soldiers' home in this state, shall for the purpose of this act, have a legal residence therein.

Sec. 62. In all incorporated cities of over twelve thousand inhabitants, the persons authorized by or appointed pursuant to law, to act as judges and clerks of election in any such city, or in any ward or other election district in such city in this state, shall constitute a board of registration for their respective cities, wards or election districts, and shall meet on the second Tuesday preceding any general, state or city election and fourteen days before any special election. Said board shall meet at nine o'clock in the morning at a place where the last election was held, or such other place as may be lawfully designated for that purpose by the election district law in which said board are judges and clerks, and shall continue in session until nine o'clock in the afternoon. They shall proceed to make a registration as hereinafter prescribed, of all persons entitled to vote at the ensuing election in such election district. Such registration when completed shall constitute and be known as the register of electors of such election district. Two such registers shall be made by said board, unless ballot judges are required or provided for, in which event three registers shall be made. Such board shall have and exercise the same right to preserve order at their meetings as is given to judges of election to preserve order on election day, and vacancies in said board shall be filled in the same manner as such vacancies are filled at election.

Sec. 63. In cities having over twelve thousand and less than forty thousand inhabitants, the registers, the form of which shall be prepared by the secretary of state, shall contain columns under the following headings and sub-headings, viz.: "Names," "Voted," "Residence," "Number," "Street or Avenue," "Place of Birth," "Color," "Length of Residence," "United States—years," "State—years, months," "District—years, months, days," "First or Second Papers," "Date of Papers," "Court or Place," "Able to Read English," "Where Last Registered—ward, district," and "Remarks." The board of registration in each district therein shall enter all names in such registers, alphabetically by surnames. They shall enter therein the names of all persons residing in their election district whose names appear in the poll-list and register in said district at the last preceding election as having voted thereat, except such as are known to the board to have since died, removed from the district or become disqualified; and so far as known to any of said board, the proper entries shall be made opposite each name in the different columns of said registry. In case the boundaries of the district have been changed since the preceding election, and a poll-list of the same made, then the board shall place on the registers only the names of the persons appearing by such poll-list to be residents within the new district in which they are sitting.

In addition to the names on said poll-list and register, the board shall enter on said registers the names of all proper persons who shall personally appear for registration, as well as the name of any person who shall make and have presented to the board at any time while sitting to correct the registry list an affidavit in form substantially as follows:

"I, ..., being first duly sworn, on oath say that I am a legally qualified voter in the State of Minnesota; and that I now reside at No. .... street (or avenue) in the ....., election district in the ....., ward in the city of ....., in said state; that I have not been and will not be able to be present at said election district for the purpose of registration for the reason that .....; that I make this affidavit because of such inability so to attend for registration and for the purpose of being registered in said election district; that my full name is .....; I was born at ..... ; am ..... (householder, boarder, lodger, employe or other proper term); (the following to be omitted if native born) that I have taken out my ..... (first or second) papers for the purpose of naturalization, the same being issued by the ..... (give court and place) on the ..... (give date or other particulars)

State of ....., County of ..... ss.—On this ..... day of ....., 18..., befor me, the subscriber, a ..... in and for said county, personally appeared ....., to me personally known, and being by me first duly sworn, subscribed to the foregoing statement. .....

Such affidavit shall be subscribed and sworn to before some person qualified to administer oaths, who shall attach his official certificate thereto, according to the above form.

If it shall appear by such affidavit that the affiant has removed from another election district, or is registered elsewhere in the city, a certificate of removal from such other district shall also be required as provided in the next succeeding section.

Sec. 64. When it shall appear by the answer or affidavit of the applicant for registration, or shall be known to the board of registration that the applicant has or is registered in another election district in the same city than the one at which he makes his application, the board shall not enter his name in said register until a certificate of removal is procured from the board of such other district, which may be in the following form:

"This is to certify that the name of ....., heretofore residing at ....., in this election district, has been by us, the board of registration of this district, stricken from the registration of this district at his request, upon his affidavit of removal. The following entries appear upon the register of this election district, concerning him (add entries in various columns of register).

Signed by the board of registration of former place of registration.

Except as hereinafter provided, the above certificate shall be granted by such board upon and only upon the applicant for registry making and subscribing the following affidavit, which shall be sworn to before such board, or before the board in the district to which the removal is to be made, and if made before the latter board, upon being presented to the former, such affidavit shall warrant such former board in issuing the above certificate to the bearer.

"I, ..., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I now reside at number ..... (street or avenue), in ward number ....., in the city of ....., That I am duly entered as a qualified voter in the registers of the ..... district, in the ..... ward, of said city, as residing at number ..... (street or avenue); that I have removed from the last mentioned residence, and do hereby request the proper entry and record to be made, and that my name be erased from the register of the last mentioned district, and a certificate of removal furnished me."

If a person remove from one place in a district to another place in the same district, his vote shall not be received at any election unless the registers are changed as herein provided.

Provided, that whenever a "registry oath of an absent person," specified in section sixty-three of this act, is presented to the board in the district where such affidavit shows such person to have formerly resided, and such affidavit further shows the person subscribing the same to be a resident of and voter in another election district, then if affiant's name appears upon the registers, the board shall erase it therefrom and give the person presenting the affidavit a certificate of removal for the person mentioned in the affidavit, making upon the registers the following entry: "Removed to ..... district, ... ward, by affidavit presented by .....".

Sec. 65. The board of registration in the district from which the removal, in a case specified in the proviso to the last preceding section, is made shall not retain the affidavit so presented to them, but it, together with the certificate of removal, shall be deposited with the board of registration in the district to which the removal is made.

In cities having over forty thousand inhabitants, the registers shall be substantially as those provided for in section sixty-three of this act, except that in place of the heading "Where last registered—ward—district," the heading shall be "Householder—boarder—lodger—employe."

The board of registration in each district therein shall enter all names in said registers, alphabetically by surnames, but there shall be no name of any person registered unless he shall appear personally before said board, or register by affidavit of absent person as provided by section sixty-three of this act; and no copy shall be made of any names on the poll lists of any previous election.

Sec. 67. In all election districts in cities having over twelve thousand inhabitants one of the judges of election shall administer to all persons appearing personally before him for registration the following oath or affirmation:

"You do solemnly swear (or affirm) that you will fully and truly answer such questions as shall be put to you touching your place of residence, place of birth and your qualifications as an elector, and your right to register and vote under the laws of this state."

One of the judges shall then ask each of the said persons appearing before them the questions necessary to properly fill out the spaces opposite the names of such persons in the various columns of the register.

The clerks or other members of the board shall enter the names of such persons in the registers, and the answers to the questions in appropriate columns thereto.

In the column headed "residence, there shall be the name and number of the street, or other location of the dwelling, if there be a definite number; if not, such clear and definite description of the place of such dwelling as shall enable it to be readily ascertained.

If more than one family be residing in a house, there shall be entered the floor on which the applicant resides, and the room or rooms occupied by him.

The register shall be ruled, and one name shall be written on each line, but no name shall be written between the lines, and if the name of any person be so written, such person shall not be entitled or allowed to vote, unless his name shall also appear properly on a line in said register.

At the end of the first day's registration the board shall carefully compare the registers and make them to correspond and agree, and one or more of the judges of election shall sign his name at the end of the list on every page of such register, so that no name can be added without discovery, and all the judges shall also sign and attach to such register a certificate in substance as follows:

"We, the undersigned, judges of election in the ..... district of ..... ward, of the city of ....., in the State of Minnesota, do jointly and severally certify that at the general registration of electors in said election district, on the ..... day of ....., 18—, there were registered by us in said election district the names which in this book are inserted, and that the number of registered and qualified voters was and is the number of ....." (Number to be written in figures and words.)

If any females shall have registered, then the certificate shall read, after the blank following the words "number of ....." "of whom ..... are males and ..... are females."

Such registers shall, before ten o'clock in the forenoon of the next day be deposited by one of said board in the office of the city clerk or recorder, whose duty it shall be to safely keep the same.

Sec. 68. In said cities having over twelve thousand inhabitants, on Tuesday, two weeks preceding any general election, and on the thirteenth day preceding any special election, said board of registration shall again meet at the same place as before, and remain in public session from nine o'clock in the forenoon until nine o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of registering all qualified voters whose names are not yet registered.

They shall obtain from the city clerk or recorder, and use the same registers as on the first day, and the same forms shall be observed in regard to registration as were required upon the first day of registration.

At the end of such day's registration the registers shall be compared and made to agree, and shall be signed as at the first day's registration, and similar certificates attached with this addition thereto, "making the total number registered to date hereof, inclusive, ..., of whom ..... are males and ..... are females."

It shall be the duty of the clerks of election composing said board during the session of that day and before the board adjourns to make a copy of all the names upon such registers, together with the addresses as indicated in such registers.

Immediately after its completion, said copy shall be conspicuously posted up outside the place of registration, with a notice of the time when such board of registration will meet for a completion and final correction of its registers, and shall be accessible to any elector who may desire to examine or copy the same.

The registers shall be returned by one of said board to the office of the city clerk or recorder before 10 o'clock in the forenoon of the day succeeding the day of registration.

Sec. 69. On the last Tuesday preceding any general election and on the day one week preceding any special election, the boards of election in cities having over twelve thousand and less than forty thousand inhabitants shall again meet at the same place for the completion and final correction of said registers.

And in like manner, in cities having over forty thousand inhabitants, the boards of registration shall again meet on the second Saturday preceding the day of any general election, and again on the last Saturday preceding said day of any general election.

Prior to each of said meetings said boards of registration shall again obtain the same registers before used from the office of the city clerk or recorder, and on each of said days shall be in session from nine o'clock in the forenoon until nine o'clock in the afternoon.

Any qualified elector not already registered, may apply to either of said board to have his name inserted in said register; and the same rules for registration required on previous days shall be observed by the board.

It shall be the duty of each of said boards at any meeting thereof, to erase from the registers the name of any person inserted therein who shall be proven, by the oath of two qualified electors of such district, to the satisfaction of the board, to be in any way disqualified to vote in such district at the ensuing election.

At the end of each meeting the registers shall be again compared, and be made to agree and correspond, and shall be signed and certified by the board as at their second meeting and deposited in the city clerk's or recorder's office before ten o'clock in the forenoon on the next succeeding day.

When said registration shall have been wholly completed, and before the said board shall adjourn or separate they shall prepare a copy of all the names and their respective addresses, appearing upon such registers, and post the same conspicuously forthwith outside the place of registration, or in such a manner as to be plainly discernible and easily read from the outside thereof.

Sec. 70. The vote of no person whose name does not appear in said register as a qualified voter shall be received by the judges at any election, in any city having over twelve thousand inhabitants, except the vote of a person whose name was registered and erased, as provided in section sixty-nine and who takes the oath as required by section nine-eight of this act.

Sec. 71. "The whole number of the above named persons who were present and voting at the above named election was ....." (the number to be written in words and figures.)

Sec. 123. After having prepared and signed the statements in the poll lists and registers, as provided in the last section, the judges shall proceed to canvass the votes taken at such election, and the said canvass shall be public and continued without intermission (except as provided in section seventy-three of this act) until complete and the result declared.

Sec. 124. The ballot boxes shall be opened and the votes canvassed and results declared, one box at a time, and as nearly as may be in the following order: First, the box containing the white ballots. Second, the box containing the ballots tinted blue. Third, the box containing the ballots tinted red.

The ballots in the box provided for women shall then be canvassed for such officers as they are entitled to vote for.

The returns shall not be prepared until all the votes in all the boxes shall have been counted, so as to allow for the correction of errors if any shall have occurred by reason of the deposit of ballots in wrong boxes.

Sec. 125. The canvass shall commence by taking out of the box the ballots unopened (except so far as to ascertain whether every ballot is single), and counting the same to ascertain whether the number of ballots correspond with the number appearing on the poll list to have been cast in such box.

If two or more ballots be found to be so folded together as to present the appearance of a single ballot, they shall be laid aside until the counting of ballots in all the boxes is otherwise completed, and if it shall then appear, on comparison of the said ballots with the number of ballots cast the same class appearing by the poll lists to have been cast, that the two ballots so found folded together were cast by one elector, they shall be preserved and laid to one side and not counted; nor shall either of said ballots so folded together be counted if both be marked and both clearly cast by one elector.

If the ballots in any box are found to exceed in number the number of votes cast in such box, they shall be first examined to ascertain if they are all properly marked with the initials of the judges having charge of the ballots, and, in case any are found not so marked, they shall be preserved and laid to one side and not counted if the total number still be in excess of the proper number as shown by the poll lists.

If there is still an excess of ballots they shall be replaced in the box, and one of the judges, without looking, shall draw from the box a number of ballots equal to such excess, and the same shall be laid aside and not counted.

Sec. 126. If the number of ballots found in the proper box shall equal or exceed the number shown by the poll lists as proper to be found therein, no ballots proper to have been deposited therein, but found in another box, shall be counted; but if the number shall be less than the number shown by the poll lists and additional ballots proper to have been deposited in such box shall afterwards be found in another box, such ballots shall be counted in the same manner as if found in the proper box.

Provided, that the counting of such ballots shall, not produce an excess of votes above the number of votes delivered by the poll lists, in which event the number of ballots so found shall be reduced by drawing therefrom as in the last preceding section provided in cases of excess.

Sec. 127. If one or more ballots not proper to be found among the ballots being canvassed shall be so found the same shall be laid aside until the canvass of the class of ballots to which said ballots belong, when if there be a deficiency in the number of ballots as shown by the poll list for such class said ballots so found in the wrong box shall be included and counted with the ballots to which they belong.

Sec. 128. The number of ballots agreeing or being thus made to agree with the number of votes appearing in the columns of the poll lists, corresponding to the respective boxes, the ballots so laid aside and not counted as aforesaid shall be attached to a certificate made by the judges, stating the reason why the ballots were so laid aside, and the certificate and the ballots attached shall be sealed up in a separate envelope and, except the red ballots, returned to the county auditor with the other returns, and the red ballots shall be returned to the city clerk or recorder.

Sec. 129. The judges of election shall then proceed to count and ascertain the number of votes cast for each person voted for at such election, counting each ballot separately, and numbering the same consecutively in the order in which they are counted, said numbering to be in some uniform place and so done as not to deface or disfigure the ballot in any manner; and the clerk of election shall carefully enter and keep an account of each of said votes on rust in tally-sheets or tally-books as hereinafter provided, and when all the ballots shall have been counted, and from time to time previously thereto if the judges shall so require, said clerks shall compare their tallies, and if necessary, correct the same; and the same shall be done in the case of each separate tally-sheet, or each sheet of the tally-book, before work shall be commenced on another sheet.

Sec. 130. Two tally-books or two sets of tally-sheets shall be furnished for each election district by the official charged with the printing of the ballots and at the same time and in the same manner that such ballots are furnished, and shall be substantially as follows:

Each tally sheet or the first sheet of each tally-book to be furnished by the secretary of state shall be headed "Tally sheet for white ballots, ... election district, ... November, ... 18...." directly under which and extending across the sheet from side to side shall be ruled or marked in red ink two heavy lines one-half of an inch apart.

At the left hand side of each sheet in a column of suitable width, commencing just below said red lines, there shall be printed in plain type the titles of the several offices to be filled and the name of each and every candidate for the same, with as many blank lines as appear on the printed ballot, as well as proposed constitutional amendments or other questions to be voted upon, the whole being as near as may be in the same order as they appear on the official ballot with the squares for marking the same omitted therefrom.

Under each set or group of candidates and blank lines for any one office there shall be a similar line in red ink, extending across the sheet, and another such line across the bottom of said sheet.

Heavy red lines shall be printed or ruled from the red line nearest the top to the red line at the bottom of each of said sheets as follows: Three lines so as to form two spaces, each three-eighths of an inch wide, the first of said lines to be close to the column of names hereinbefore provided for; then lines so as to form ten spaces each one-half inch in width followed by one space three-eighths of an inch wide, and as many additional sets of lines as may be convenient, each set to form ten spaces each one-half of an inch in width followed by one space three-eighths of an inch in width.

Under the name of each candidate or blank line, except where a red line is herein provided, shall be printed or ruled a light blue line extending across the entire sheet, and in each of the spaces one-half of an inch in width and extending from the second line from the top to the bottom line as aforesaid shall be printed or ruled four light-blue lines in such a manner as to divide each of said spaces into five smaller spaces, each one-tenth of an inch in width.

Immediately below the red line across the sheet and nearest the top thereof, there shall be printed in the first of the spaces three-eighths of an inch in width the words, "brought forward," and in the similar space at the extreme right shall be printed the words "carried forward." In each of the other spaces three-eighths of an inch wide shall be printed the word "number," or its abbreviation "No." And over the column of names shall be printed the words "offices and candidates."

On the same line and in the spaces one-half an inch in width shall be printed in figures, in numerical order, commencing at the left, "five," "ten," "fifteen" and so on in multiples of five.

In each column headed "number" or "No." shall be printed in figures in numerical order, "one," "two," "three," and so on, the figure "one" to be placed in the line with and opposite the name of the candidate nearest the top, the figure "two" opposite the name of the next candidate thereon, and in like manner down the entire column, each column so headed "number" to be the counterpart of each and every other column so headed; but no number shall be placed opposite any blank line, but only on the line of a printed name, save that numbers may be placed after "yes," and after "no," when constitutional amendments or other questions are being voted upon.

Sec. 131. The tally-sheets or tally-books to be furnished by county auditors shall be substantially the same as provided in the last preceding section, except that the word "blue" shall be substituted for the word "white" in the heading; and the tally-sheets or tally-books to be furnished by the city clerk or other official charged with the printing of the red ballots shall be similar thereto except that the word "red" shall be substituted for the word "white" in said heading, and except that the column containing the names of candidates may be printed or written or partly printed and partly written, as may be most convenient to said city clerk or other official.

Sec. 132. The tally-sheets, prepared as provided in this act, may be printed separately and consecutively numbered or a sufficient number thereof for an election district may be stitched together in book form, and in all cases the number furnished shall be sufficient for the proper tallying of all votes which may be cast in such district, even though all such votes be cast for one candidate or set of candidates.

Sec. 133. When, for any cause, proper tally-sheets shall not have been received by any board of election, and the same cannot readily be secured, the judges shall cause the clerks to prepare tally-sheets, as near as may be, in conformity with the provisions of this act, in which event they shall certify on said sheets the fact that they were so prepared and used because of the non-receipt of official tally-sheets.

Sec. 134. In canvassing the votes cast as herein provided, a memoranda shall be kept of the name of the reading judge and of the numbers of the ballots read by him, of the name of the judge watching such reading, and of the name of the judge who shall string the ballots and watch the clerks; and when they shall change places or clerks are relieved temporarily or otherwise, a memoranda of the same shall be kept. Said memoranda shall be certified in duplicate and one copy thereof shall be attached to each of the tally-books or set of tally-sheets.

Sec. 135. In counting the votes as the reading judge announces the name of a candidate and the office voted for, each of the clerks shall make a small straight mark, substantially like the figure one, in the small unoccupied space nearest said name, as provided therefor on the tally-sheet, and on a line with the name of such candidate, and one of the clerks shall at the time of making such mark say "one," "two," "three," "four," or "five," according to whether the blank space is first, second, third, fourth or fifth in any space one-half an inch in width and formed by red lines as aforesaid. If the other clerk shall find the same small space the proper one in which to make such mark he shall so enter the same, but if not he shall at once call attention thereto and the two tally-sheets shall be made to correspond and the record made correct.

In like manner as other names are read the proper marks shall be made on each of the tally-sheets, until a line on which is the name of any one candidate shall contain no more unoccupied small spaces, whereupon, the sheets having been compared, a mark in ink shall be made after the last tally opposite each of the names thereon in such a manner that no additional tallies can be made thereon without detection.

In the vacant space under the heading "carried forward" shall then be entered in figures the total vote so far received by each of the candidates, opposite their respective names and the same figures shall be entered under the head "brought forward" and opposite the proper names on the sheet next to be used; whereupon the clerks shall use said last named sheet in the same manner as before, except that under the heading "carried forward" shall be included the vote entered thereon under the heading "brought forward."

And said clerks shall use said sheets in the order in which they are paged or numbered, until all the votes shall have been counted, after which they shall place, immediately after a small mark to prevent other tallies being made, the total vote received by each candidate, the same to be in both the proper lines and columns, and shall not be done until it is known that there are no more ballots, erroneously placed in other boxes, to be counted in connection with the canvass then being made.

Sec. 136. In the counting of ballots cast at any election, all ballots shall be counted for the persons for whom they were intended, so far as such intent can be clearly ascertained from the ballot itself, and in determining the intent the following rules shall be observed:

1. When the elector shall place a mark against two or more names for the same office, there being but one to be elected, he shall be deemed to have voted for none of them, and the vote counted for none.

2. When the elector shall have written the name of a person in the proper place for writing, he shall be deemed to have voted for that person, whether he makes or fails to make a crossmark (X) opposite such name.

3. A mark made out of its proper place, but on a name or so near it as to clearly indicate the choice intended for that name, shall be deemed a vote for that name; and if the mark is so near a space for marking as to indicate that it was intended for that space, it shall be deemed intended for the name to which such space applies.

4. When a number of persons are to be elected to one office all crossmarks in the small squares opposite names, not exceeding the total to be elected, including names written thereon, shall be counted. If less than the number to be elected are marked only those so marked shall be counted.

5. The judges shall disregard misspelling or abbreviations of the names of candidates for office if it can be clearly ascertained from such ballot for whom it was intended.

6. Any ballot from which the judges can determine the elector's choice for a part of the offices shall be counted for such part; but if the remainder of the ballot from which it is impossible to determine the elector's choice shall be void as to such defective part, and such defective part shall not be counted.

7. If an elector in marking his ballot shall use a mark other than a crossmark (X), as V, or I, or —, or O, or other mark clearly indicating an intent to mark against any name, it shall be deemed a sufficient vote for the candidate or candidates against whose name or names so marked; but not if the crossmark (X) be used elsewhere on the ballot.

8. If a ballot shows that a mark has been made against the name of two candidates, and an attempt made to erase or obliterate one of such marks, the ballot shall be counted for the candidate for whom the elector evidently intended to vote.

9. All ballots prepared as provided in section one hundred in this act shall be counted for the candidates or measures therein shown to be voted for.

Sec. 137. When any ballot or part of a ballot shall not be counted because of inability of the judges to determine the intent of the elector, said ballot shall be marked "defective" on the back thereof, or "defective in so far as," naming the office wherein found defective, and a memoranda of the numbers of such ballots and, if defective in part only, of the defective parts not counted shall be made out and certified by the judges and accompany the returns of such canvass. Said defective ballots shall be strung in regular order, with ballots which are duly counted.

Sec. 138. As soon as the ballots are read and canvassed, and in the order in which the same is done, said ballots shall be strung by one of the judges upon a stout string, and they shall be replaced in the ballot box, from which they were taken and in which they belong, the string being first tied and sealed. And when the correct result shall have been ascertained one of the judges so engaged in said canvass shall make and sign a certificate to those present the number of votes cast for each candidate voted for.

Sec. 139. In election districts in cities having a population of over twelve thousand inhabitants, to facilitate the casting of the ballots of electors and the counting and canvassing of the same, there shall be one additional judge of election, to be known as ballot judge, and two additional clerks of election, to be known as ballot clerks, to be chosen and appointed and vacancies filled as in the case of other judges and clerks, not more than two of the four judges nor more than two of the four clerks to belong to the same political party. Said ballot judge and ballot clerks to perform no duties in the matter of registration of voters or to render any service prior to the election or after the canvass except as expressly provided in this act.

Sec. 140. In all election districts in cities having a population of less than twelve thousand inhabitants, as well as in all villages and towns, a ballot judge and two ballot clerks shall be chosen and appointed as provided for in the last preceding section, and the powers and duties shall be as provided in this act.

Provided, that the city council, village council or town supervisors shall, at least thirty days prior to the election, order that such ballot judge and ballot clerks be chosen, the system to be uniform in all the election districts throughout such city, village or town in which the same may be ordered, and the system followed at one election to be thereafter followed unless otherwise ordered by the city council, village council or town supervisors, as the case may be.

Sec. 141. Whenever a ballot judge and ballot clerks shall be chosen they shall each be in attendance at the opening of the polls and shall serve until all the votes are counted. They shall receive from the judges of election the blocks of ballots and the same shall be issued to electors by them, as hereinbefore provided to be done by the judges of election and in lieu thereof. Said ballot judge and one of the ballot clerks (the two not being members of the same political party) shall place their initials on the back of the ballots, and said ballot clerks shall under direction of the ballot judge show electors how to fold their ballots, and if requested so to do, in general terms how to mark the same, but shall not mark it or allow it to be marked in their presence.

One of said ballot clerks shall have a copy of the register (of which three copies shall be prepared by the board of registration), which shall be conspicuously marked "ballot register," in which shall be checked the name of each elector to whom ballots shall be issued. If a challenge be interposed, the same shall be referred to the board of election proper, and no ballots issued until the same shall have been determined.

The ballot judge shall also have charge of the door, and shall see that electors retire promptly to voting booths, and that the gatekeeper does his duty. And any and all things otherwise required to be done by the judges of election prior to receiving the ballots from electors shall, as far as consistent with the provisions hereof, be done by said ballot judge and ballot clerks.

Sec. 142. Whenever the board of election proper shall determine that the same is advisable the ballot judge shall deliver to the elector at the time he receives his ballots a small card or paper on which shall be written or printed the first letter of the surname of the said elector and a number corresponding with the number opposite his name in the registers; and said elector shall hand the same with his ballots to the judge in charge of the ballot boxes, who shall, in addition to other announcements, state said number to aid the other judges in quickly finding the name of said elector on the registers used by them.

And in like manner, if the same be deemed advisable, said judge in charge of the ballot boxes may, after an elector has voted, hand him a card or cards to be delivered by him to the ballot judge, before leaving the polling place, as evidence that the ballots delivered to him have been properly disposed of.

Sec. 143. After the polls have been closed said ballot judge shall attach to said ballot register and at the end thereof a statement substantially as follows:

"The whole number of the above named persons who were present and received ballots for the purpose of voting was ..... The number of persons returning spoiled ballots and receiving other ballots was ....., the spoiled ballots being: white ballots, ...; blue ballots, ...; red ballots, ...; total, ..." The blanks to be filled in by both words and figures, and the statement to be certified by the ballot judge and attested by the ballot clerks, and said ballot register to be delivered to the city, village or town clerk.

Sec. 144. The statements provided by this act to be made, certified and attested in the poll lists and registers, and other necessary arrangements for the canvass having been made, the same shall be commenced. The ballot judge and one of the other judges, not of the same political party, with the aid of the ballot clerks, shall count and canvass the white ballots and make out the returns therefor, and the other judges and clerks shall count and canvass the blue ballots and make out the returns therefor. If there be a third ballot box the red ballots therein shall be counted, canvassed and return made by the board which shall the soonest complete its other work, or the members may relieve one another as they think best. In any event the memoranda provided for in this act shall be kept, and the counting and canvassing done and returns made substantially as required where no ballot judge or ballot clerks are provided for, and all the judges and all the clerks shall sign the returns. Each political party shall be entitled to one watcher for each counting board.

Sec. 145. In cities in which the municipal election is held on the same day as the general state election, the city council may, at least thirty days before election, direct that in all election districts in said city, in addition to other officers provided for in this act, there shall be two special judges of election and two special clerks of election, in which event they shall be chosen and appointed as are the regular judges and clerks, and subject to like restrictions. They shall have no authority to act during the election, but shall be present at the hour for closing the polls, and if not so present the vacancies may be filled as in other cases provided. Said special judges and special clerks shall count and canvass the red ballots only, and make return of the same as provided by law.

Sec. 146. Said ballot judges, ballot clerks, special judges and special clerks shall possess the same qualifications and be paid the same compensation, for like services, as other judges and clerks of election, and shall be subject to like penalties for any violation of this act. They shall deliver all returns made by them to the board of election proper, as well as election supplies and furnishings of every description; and the said board of election shall do or cause to be done all things thereafter required by this act required to be done by them to the same extent as though no ballot judges or special judges or ballot clerks or special clerks had been provided for or in attendance.

Sec. 147. Nothing in this act shall be deemed to authorize the employment or service of ballot judges, ballot clerks, special judges or special clerks at any save at a general state election.

Sec. 148. When the canvass shall have been completed, and as soon as practicable thereafter, in the presence of all the judges, each box shall be locked and sealed by pasting firm paper across the lid and body of each box in such a manner that the box cannot be opened without breaking the seal; and each judge shall write his name upon said paper in such place that the box cannot be opened without tearing the name. Said sealings shall not be done, however, until it shall have been ascertained, by a canvass of the ballots in all the boxes, that all the ballots so to be sealed up in said box have been placed therein; but the same shall in all cases be done before the board shall separate or adjourn.

Sec. 149. Each ballot box as soon as practicable after the same is sealed as provided in the last preceding section, shall be deposited in the office of the town, city or village clerk, and carefully preserved therein with unbroken seals until the next general election, unless sooner opened by the proper authority for a recount or for examination. If, however, any committee of either of the political parties represented on the ticket voted at such election shall, on or before the day of election, apply to the legal custodian of the ballot box or ballot boxes for permission to affix additional seals and securities to the ballot boxes within the control of such custodian, said custodian shall give such permission, and immediately notify the party so applying of the time when the same shall be done, which time shall not be later than two days after election.

Such custodian shall forthwith, after receipt of such application, notify all parties upon such election ticket of their representatives of the fact of such application, and the time when such seals will be affixed, and that at such time so designated at the office of said custodian, in the presence of such custodian and of the representatives of the political parties upon said ticket, the party so applying shall have the right to affix additional seals and securities, and in any manner secure and mark the same, and any of the other parties then present shall have the same right and privileges as the party so applying; but none of said parties shall in any manner injure or impair any of the seals on said box hereinbefore provided.

Sec. 150. After the canvass of the votes shall have been completed one of said poll lists and one of said registers so kept and checked as aforesaid shall be attached together, and on the following day shall be filed in the office of the city, town or village clerk, together with the ballot register, if any, and the other of said poll lists and registers and poll books so kept and checked shall be returned to the office of the county auditor at the time the returns of the election are made.

Said poll lists and registers shall at all times be open to public inspection at the office of the authorities in which they shall be deposited, without charge.

Sec. 151. In making out the statement to be known as the returns of election, on blank forms to be furnished as provided in this act and to be prepared by the clerks of election when not so furnished, said clerks of election shall set down the total number of names entered upon the registers of election, male and female separately, in columns prepared therefor, and the total number of ballots actually cast and counted the name of each and every person voted for, written out at length, the office for which such person received any votes, and the number of votes he received, the number being written out in words and also in figures. The said returns shall be as nearly as possible in the following form, to-wit: "At an election held at ..... in the (number, if any) ..... election district, composed of ..... township, village or town, as the case may be), in the county of ....., in the state of Minnesota, on the .....day of ....., eighteen hundred ....., the following named persons received the number of votes opposite their respective names for the following described offices, to-wit:

For (specifying the office) A received (the number to be written in figures and also at length) votes," (and likewise for every person voted for for any office.)

Said returns shall be made in duplicate and each copy thereof shall be signed by the judges of election and attested by the clerks of election.

In any city having a population of forty thousand or more inhabitants the city council may require said judges of election to insert on forms to be prepared by the city clerk a preliminary statement of the votes cast as soon as the count of any one class of ballots shall have been completed, and in like manner as soon as any other class of ballots shall have been completed. Said statement or statements shall be signed by one or more of the judges of election, and, as soon as practicable after the result shall be known for state, county or city offices, as the case may be, shall be delivered to a special messenger to be designated by the city clerk, which special messenger shall at once take the same to the office of such city clerk; but said statement shall not be deemed an official return or used for any purpose save for general information in advance of the preparation and filing of the official returns.

Sec. 152. After the canvass is thus completed the judges of election, before they are dispersed, shall enclose the said returns in envelopes, seal the same, and endorse thereon the following words: "Election returns of the election district of (naming it the name of the town or ward or city), in the county of ....." and direct one of the same to the county auditor of that county and the other to the town, or village clerk; and in the case of a city election, to the city clerk or recorder.

Sec. 153. One copy of the returns provided for in the last preceding section shall (except in cities having over twelve thousand inhabitants) be carried by one of said judges, to be chosen by lot if not otherwise agreed upon, and delivered to the said county auditor at his office and the other copy shall be delivered to the clerk of the town, city or village wherein said election district is located. And in case of any town, city or village or town election, the returns thereof shall be so certified, attested and delivered to the clerk of such town, city or village.

Sec. 154. Returns of election in unorganized counties shall be made to the auditor of the county to which they are attached for election purposes; and the vote shall be canvassed and certificates of election issued to the persons elected in the same manner provided in this act for canvassing the votes and issuing certificates of election in unorganized counties.

Sec. 155. Except in cities having over twelve thousand inhabitants, the judges of all election districts, situate within fifty miles of the county seat, shall file their election returns within twenty-four hours after the time of closing the polls; and in all other cases the returns shall be filed within seventy-two hours after the closing of the polls.

Provided, however, that sufficient time has intervened between the time of closing said polls and the time for so filing said returns, in which to canvass the votes and make out and deliver said returns.

Any judge or judges failing to file returns as provided in this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

Sec. 156. In all cities having over twelve thousand inhabitants, the judges and clerks, immediately after the completion of the canvass of votes and making out of returns, shall, without separating one from the other and without stopping at any place or leaving their ballot boxes or returns at any place or with any person, deliver said returns and ballot boxes, and all things by this act required to be delivered by them, to the city clerk or recorder at the office of said city clerk or recorder.

Said city clerk or recorder, or his properly authorized deputy, shall remain in his office to receive such returns or ballot boxes and ballots, until all of the same from all of the election districts within his said city have been so returned to him.

Said city clerk or recorder shall keep a book in which he shall enter in the presence of said judges and clerks the names of said judges and the hour at which they returned and delivered to him said returns and ballot boxes; which book shall be preserved by said officer as a public document for the same length of time as he is required to preserve the ballots cast at such election.

Said judges of election shall select one of their number, to be chosen by lot if not otherwise agreed upon, to deliver the returns and ballots, as provided herein, to the county auditor.

Said judge, so selected, shall so deliver said returns and ballots and all things required by this act to be delivered to the county auditor or his deputy, within twenty-four hours after the delivery of the ballot boxes and returns at the office of the said city clerk or recorder as aforesaid.

Any one violating any provision of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

Sec. 157. There shall be paid out of the county treasury of each county to the person carrying the election ballots from the office of the county auditor, for the election districts in his town, city or village, and also for returning of the returns in addition to the county auditor the sum of one dollar, and also the sum of ten cents for every mile necessarily traveled in going to and returning from the office of the county auditor for each of the purposes above mentioned in addition to the fixed unorganized counties, and to be paid out of the treasury of the county to which they are attached.

All expenses for printing the blue ballots and for the carrying of the ballots and returns as herein provided shall be audited and allowed by the board of county commissioners of the proper county in the same manner as other claims are allowed, and may be paid upon the warrant of the county auditor.

Sec. 158. At all elections to be held under this act each member of a board of election shall receive as compensation for his services the sum of thirty cents per hour for each and every hour necessarily engaged therein, but no allowance shall be made for time spent by them in arranging for polling places, arranging booths or other services not specifically required by this act to be done by them or either of them.

Special constables shall be paid the sum of twenty cents per hour, for such time as the judges shall require their services, not exceeding twenty-four hours, their bills to be certified by the judges.

The compensation provided for in this section, as well as the expenses of providing ballot boxes and polling places, shall be borne by the several townships, cities and villages where the election is conducted; and the village council or town supervisors shall, in the event of disputes, determine whether or not the said judges or clerks were "necessarily engaged" for the length of time for which compensation is claimed.

Sec. 159. If any judge or clerk of election, or any other officer or any other person required by this act to keep safely and produce the ballots intrusted to him on the day of election, or to perform any act or thing whatever, shall willfully fail or refuse to perform such act or thing, or shall be guilty of any fraud, corruption, malfeasance, misbehavior in canvassing or making any returns of votes, or shall wrongfully refuse to make or deliver any certificate of election, or shall willfully perform any act or thing falsely or corruptly in any manner, he shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment in the state prison for a term not less than six months nor more than one year, or by a fine of not less than five hundred dollars nor more than two thousand dollars, or both, in the discretion of the court. This provision in this section to apply in all cases coming within the provisions of this act where other punishment is not specially provided for.

Sec. 160. Whoever shall willfully take or carry away from the place where he has been deposited, or shall deface or mutilate, damage or add to any poll book, ballot, list or register, or any name or figure therein, shall on conviction thereof, be fined in a sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, or be imprisoned in the state prison not longer than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 161. If, from any cause, the judges of elections shall fail to make return as provided for in this act it shall be the duty of the county auditor or clerk to whose office such returns ought to have been made to dispatch a special messenger to obtain such returns and said messenger shall be entitled to the same compensation as a judge of election for such services and be subject to the same penalties.

Sec. 162. No election returns shall be refused by any county auditor, or town, city or village clerk or recorder for the reason that the same are returned or delivered to him in any other than the manner directed herein, except that they must be sealed.

Sec. 163. No canvassing board of any county, town, city or village shall refuse to include any returns in its canvass of votes on account of any informality in holding any election or making returns thereof; but all returns shall be received and the votes canvassed by such canvassing board, and included in its statements provided there is a substantial compliance with the provisions of this act.

Sec. 164. The county auditor, the chairman of the board of county commissioners, and two justices of the peace of the same county, or opposite political parties, if possible, to be selected by the auditor, shall constitute the county canvassing board, and on or before the tenth day after the election, said board shall proceed, after taking the usual oath of office, to openly and publicly canvass the returns made to the auditor's office.

Sec. 165. Said county canvassing board shall make and prepare separate statements, the same to be signed and certified by said board and deposited in the office of the county auditor.

Any three of said county canvassing board shall constitute a quorum, and are authorized to make the canvass provided in the last preceding section, and to certify to said statements, which shall be as follows:

1. A statement containing the whole number of votes given in each county for the office of governor and lieutenant governor, chief or associate justices of the supreme court, secretary of state, auditor of state, treasurer of state, clerk of the supreme court, judges of the district court, and all other officers of state, the names of the persons for whom such votes were given, and the number of votes given for each, also upon the same return there shall be entered the total number of registered names, male and female separately, in each election district, and the total number of ballots actually cast therein.

5. A statement of the votes upon any proposed change of county line or county seat.

6. A statement of the votes given for and against proposed amendments to the constitution.

Sec. 166. Two copies of each of the separate statements provided for in the last preceding section shall be made, and the same shall be certified under the official seal of the auditor, one of which shall be enclosed and directed to the secretary of state and be forwarded to the seat of government by mail, and the other copy shall be enclosed and forwarded to the secretary of state in a like manner as the first copy, but by different mail, and within five days after such first copy shall have been so transmitted.

In the event that neither of said copies so transmitted shall be received by the secretary of state within twenty days after the election, the county auditor shall transmit, by a messenger to be deputed by him, upon notification from the secretary of state, another copy of such statement.

If within twenty days after such election, no such copy shall have been received by the secretary of state from each county in the state, it shall be his duty to immediately notify the auditors of each county from which such returns have not been received, of such fact.

The county auditor shall endorse on the envelope enclosing each of such statements or copies the names of the auditor and his official residence, and the words "election returns."

Sec. 167. At the close of the canvass by the county canvassing board it shall declare the person having the highest number of votes for any county office, duly elected, subject to an appeal to the district court of the proper county.

And, in case said county contains a senatorial or representative district, then the persons having the highest number for senator or representative shall be declared by said board duly elected.

In case of an appeal, notice thereof shall be entered with the clerk of said court within twenty days after the day of election.

Sec. 168. If there be two or more counties in such district of the same age, then the returns shall be directed to the auditor of the county polling the greatest number of votes at the last preceding general election; and said auditor shall forward such statement to the proper auditor within fifteen days after the election.

Sec. 170. When two or more counties are comprised in one senatorial district, the auditor of the senior county, or of the county to which the returns are to be made, shall, on the twentieth day after election, with such other county auditors of the district as choose to attend at his office, call to his assistance two justices and the chairman of the board of county commissioners of his county, and then and there open the returns of the votes given in the several counties, or portions of counties, comprising such senatorial districts.

Said auditor of the county to which the returns are made shall immediately make out certificates of election for the persons having the highest number of votes in such senatorial district for the members of the legislature, which certificates shall be delivered to the persons entitled thereto.

Sec. 171. If on proceeding to canvass the votes it shall appear to said senatorial district board of canvassers, or any majority thereof, that in any statement produced certain matters are omitted in such statement that should have been inserted, or that any mist

Sec. 197. All fines incurred or collected under this act shall be paid into the county treasury of the county wherein the offense was committed for the use of the common schools of such county.

Sec. 198. In city elections this act shall be construed in connection with laws authorizing such elections, which shall be held at such time or times as such laws may provide; nor shall the terms of city officials be affected by any of the provisions of this act.

Every person adjudged to be insane under the provisions of this act, who is not an actual legal resident of this state, shall, by order of the probate court, duly made and entered, be taken by the sheriff of the county where such person is adjudged insane, to the state where such person has a legal residence and delivered either to the friends or relatives of such person, or to the sheriff of the county where such person has a legal residence.

Sec. 16. The term "insane" as used in this act includes every species of insanity, but does not include idiocy or imbecility.

Sec. 17. No person shall be deprived of his liberty in this state by being committed to custody as insane, unless his insanity be established in a manner and form as prescribed in this act, and his commitment to custody be recommended, either because (1) he has perpetrated acts dangerous to himself or to others, or to property; or (2) it is reasonably certain, by his threats or otherwise, that he has dangerous intendencies or uncontrolable propensities towards crime; or (3) he wanders about and is exposed to want of food or shelter, or to accidents; or (4) he is ill-treated or neglected by relatives or friends; or (5) his disease is of such a nature, or in such a stage, as to require, for his recovery, care and treatment while under legal restraint.

Whenever the probate judge, or in his absence the court commissioner of any county, shall receive information in writing that there is an insane person in his county needing care and treatment (form "B"), the said judge or court commissioner shall, by an order in writing (form "C"), direct two examiners in lunacy to examine the alleged insane person, and certify to him within one day after their respective examinations (form "D"), the result of such examination, with their recommendation as to the special action necessary to be taken in the case. If the examiners certify that the person so examined is insane, the judge or court commissioner shall dismiss the case. If they disagree, he shall call other examiners, or take further testimony. But if they certify that he is insane and a proper subject for commitment for any of the reasons specified in section 17 of this act, said judge or court commissioner shall visit the alleged insane person, or require him to be brought into court, but he shall cause him to be fully informed of the proceedings being taken against him. He may, if he deem it advisable, take further testimony or call other examiners; but in all cases before issuing a warrant of commitment the judge of probate or court commissioner shall notify the county attorney, who shall appear on behalf of the alleged insane person, and take such action as he may deem necessary to protect the rights of such person. If satisfied that the person is insane and that the reason for his commitment is sufficient under the provisions of this act, he shall approve the certificate of the examiners and issue a duplicate order and warrant (form "E"), directed to the sheriff, or some other suitable person whom he shall authorize to convey said insane person to the hospital: provided, that in case said insane person is a female, she shall be accompanied, while being conveyed to the hospital, by her husband, father, mother, brother or son, daughter, or by a woman designated by the judge of probate or court commissioner. Said order and warrant shall be issued within two days after the date of the last medical certificate, or, if any further hearing is had by the court, within two days after the completion of said examination, which shall in no case be more than ten days after the filing of the information of insanity, in the office of the judge of probate, and said sheriff, or authorized person, shall forthwith execute said warrant after its reception by him. The duplicate warrant and certified copy of examiners' certificate shall be filed in the office of the superintendent, and the original, with the superintendent's endorsement thereon, shall be returned to the judge of probate and filed in his office; provided, that until the first day of January, A. D. 1894, such judge of probate or court commissioner, with whom such information of insanity is filed, shall appoint as examiners, in each case, two physicians who, in his judgment, have the necessary qualifications.

And the time for the redemption of any land or real property in this state from any such bidding in or sale for taxes shall not expire as to the state, nor as to any person or corporation to whom the right of the state has been or shall be in any manner or at any time assigned or conveyed, nor as to any person or corporation concerned, until sixty days after the service and mailing of all the notices and copies thereof as required in the case of tax certificates by the provisions of this act or by the provisions of any other law of this state, nor until sixty days after the filing of the proofs thereof and of the sheriff's fees therefor in the office of the proper county auditor, as required by this act. For his services in serving such notices and in mailing such copies thereof, the sheriff shall be entitled to the same fees that are now or hereafter may be allowed him for the service of summons in a civil action in the district court. The fees of the sheriff for serving all such notices and for mailing all such copies thereof shall be paid, in the first instance, by the person or corporation holding the tax certificate, and shall be repaid by the party offering to redeem such land or real property, before any certificate of redemption shall issue. No transfer of the land or real property described in any tax certificate shall be made to the holder of such tax certificate on the books of the said county auditor, nor shall any such tax certificate be entitled to record, until sixty days shall have elapsed after the service of all such notices, the mailing of all copies thereof, and the filing of the proofs thereof and of the sheriff's fees therefor in the office of the proper county auditor, as required by this act.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

THE Republican League in session at Louisville, have elected W. W. Tracey, of Illinois, President of the League.

ST. PAUL is trying to outdo all former parades with her celebration of the completion of the Great Northern Railroad to the coast. The Minneapolis Harvest Festival last year was fine but this is to surpass it in grandeur.

ROBERT D. RUSSELL, of Minneapolis, has been appointed by Governor Nelson to fill the vacancy on the 4th Judicial District bench, occasioned by the resignation of Judge Lochren. All we can ask of him is to do as well as his predecessor.

THE Representative a new organ started by the Farmer's Alliance, with A. L. Stoughten for editor and Ignatius Donnelly for one of the contributers, with headquarters at St. Paul has reached our exchange table. It is a wide awake paper.

THE Inter-State Assembly Herald. Inter-Denominational, Catholic and Cosmopolitan Vol, I. No, I. reached us yesterday morning. It is issued from Detroit, Minn, and Fargo, North Dakota. It seems to have a place to fill, and it is likely to fill the place.

CARLYLE HARRIS paid the penalty fixed by law, at Sing Sing, New York, on Monday, May 8, for murdering his wife, Hellen Potts Harris. He protested his innocence, to the last. The execution was by electrocution and is said to have been the most successful yet done.

FROM the Minneapolis Journal we learn that the examining board for a Cadet to West Point, from the Minneapolis district, reported as follows:

James N. Munroe, 82; Geo. Smith, 78; B. Gruenberg, 74; Geo. V. Hankinson, 68; E. L. Sutton, 66; Ernest L. Manley, 65.

Geo. Smith, standing second, is entitled to be Munroe's alternate.

THE St. Paul Globe suggests the Governments buying silver for cash, at its marked price, paying for it in silver dollars, then doing its own coining, deriving a profit equal to the difference between the money value of silver and the actual Silver dollar minus the expence of coining. This looks, as if it might work until some better plan should turn up. And would aid in keeping an agreement in values between gold and silver.

GOVERNOR NELSON has called the Anti-Coal Combine Convention for June 5 and 6, at Central Music Hall, Chicago. In answer to his Letter inviting the Governors of the States of the Union to send ten delegates each, he has received favorable answer from a large majority. It begins to look as if a lively time would be had, and that more than likely the efforts of the investigating committee of the Minnesota Legislature will result in some good to the people of the whole United States.

QUITE a row seems to be on at the Insane Asylum. The newly appointed Superintendent. Dr. Tomlinson has had charges preferred against him by some of his corps of Assistants, all of whom refuse longer to serve, if he is to be retained at the head. He is said to be eminently well qualified as a physician but hard to get along with. He may be right or his accusers may be right. It is a case that deserves the most careful investigation. Dr. W. A. Jones, one of the new Board, and a former assistant at the St. Peter Asylum, has gone up to look into the charges. Another case of a birth having occured among the inmates is going the rounds of the papers. Such things can surely be better looked after in some way.

Tariff Pictures.

In 1870 the people of this country consumed only 1.729 pounds of coal per capita. In 1892 their per capita consumption had grown to 5,234 pounds. There is no better index of a people's prosperity than coal consumption.—New York Press.

According to this Delano is becoming very prosperous: For in 1870 there was not a ton of coal used in the village where now dozens of families are using it to keep warm by, from October to May. "It is a poor wind that blows nobody good."

For the Edification of "Prof." Kennedy and the Doctor.

EDITOR EAGLE.—Will you kindly allow me space in your columns to convey to "Prof." William Kennedy, of Maple Plain, the intelligence that the Hennepin county board of commissioners has confirmed the appointment of Mr. Wilcox, of Richfield, as deputy county superintendent of schools. It is important that Mr. Kennedy and the editor of the Gazette should be made aware of this fact at once. Mr. Kennedy's occupation as Hennepin county correspodent of the Gazette will soon be gone, and the overworked force in the composing room of your esteemed contemporary will no doubt get a day off, which will allow the editor of that paper an opportunity to fumigate the office. And if he should find that his system requires renovating, after the campaign of dirt and misrepresentation in which he has indulged Mr. Kennedy, I can recommend "Carter's little liver pills" as a specific. As for Mr. Kennedy, it is apprent that the sphere of a counrty pedagogue is too limited for a man of his conspicious ability. He has earned promotion, he should be elevated at once to the position of private secretary to the "Hon" Edward Eagan. Mr. Kennedy has not asked for an endorsement of this kind from me, but as I am trying to build up a little reputation for philanthropy, I give freely without solicitation.

WARREN WAKEFIELD.

Long Lake, May 10, 1893.

Warren Wakefield, Long Lake, Whose he? Coming around here, through the columns of our up town neighbor, for the purpose of telling us and Prof. Kennedy news that the GAZETTE published a week ago, and which Professor K., doubtless, read? Perhaps Warren had better use his own prescription as he evidently needs something to hasten him up, just a little. While he was at it why did not Warren inform us that Prof. Kennedy's certificate was revoked the day before his school closed? If he succeeds in getting his "pills" down possibly he will be prepared to "inform" us on this subject, which some of Mr. Shaver's supporters, eyen, do not approve of. And, too, he might "inform" us where Mr. Baker "is at." And there is just lots of things people would like to know. As for the Hon. Edward Egan being in need of a private secretary, if he is, we presume he will make his own selection.

CORRESPONDENCE

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Farmers are now putting in there best time trying to get the seed in the ground. The spring is late and otherwise unfavorable and it is necessary for the farmer to take every advantage in order to get in his crop; but if we do not sow we can not reap.

An Agent for Quinn Bro. of Wayerly was in Independence one day this week selling Machinery. Rather early to buy binders, at least under the present outlook for a crop. B. Drake and his two sons think of going to Modern Sodom, (Chicago) to the World's Fair some time in June.

Bids are now open for the building of a new school house at Maple Plain.

Wm. Kenedy's school at Maple Plain closed last week.

Dexter Mills caught a fish in Pioneer creek, last Saturday, that beats the record. Its avoirdupois was 29 lbs.

H. Smith is pressing and shipping straw from Armstrong.

Many places in the roads through Independence are in bad shape. Caused by high water, from deep snows and heavy rains. And it will cost considerable to put them in repair again.

The A. C. campmeeting has been located at Armstrong, beginning 3d of June, and holding over two Sundays.

The train that makes the fastest time in the world is known as the Flying Dutchman and goes at a speed of 60 miles per hour, and yet it does not travel fast as the news of the liars and tattlers tongue and you have more to fear from the latter than from the former.

Memorial day will be observed at Maple Plain, May 30, in the usual way. The exercises will be at the cemetery, Armstrong, and at Batdorf's grove, Oration by Frank Nye, of Minneapolis, a brother to Bill Nye, the humorist. Memorial sermon will be Sunday following Decoration Day. Come out one and all.

Superintendent Lewis, of Long Lake, was in Independence last week.

BORN,—Last week, to Mr. and Mrs. W. Stinson, a boy. All doing well.

FROM THE EVERGREEN STATE.

REV. W. H. WILSON.

EDITOR BUFFALO GAZETTE.—The Buffala Gazette visits us nearly every week, it is always a welcome visitor, we are glad to note the advance in some things over the Rockies, and sorry to note some other things, for instance glad to hear of some who have made, we trust, their lives brighter and more profitable by joining hands and setting out early in life, willing to obey the injunction of Divine law, be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth and subdue it. It always makes us feel good to say as we have this year a few times. I pronounce that you are husband and wife, sorry to hear that the Democrats of Delano even think of having an election or test vote to deside who they woule like fyr postmaster. But very glad that my friend Charley Belt is the favored and growing candidate. I think any trust our rich Uncle Samuel may place in Charlies hands will receiye all the attention necessary to make it a success. Mr. Editor we generally appreciate your state, and might fall in love with it if it were not for a few draw backs. However you are not much behind Iowa in long winters, for I notice the day on which you went to press, April 21st that it was also snowing in Lyons county Iowa, and the snow had continued falling for about a week, and had put a stop to outside work. That is in the way of farming. Well sir, we are enjoying early garden truck, and apple, pear, and plumb blossoms; while wild flowers in great abundance, crown the face of nature; the very presence of which makes our hearts leap with delight. We have had but two or three days this winter that an overcoat would have been a comfort. I am fully persuaded now that the state of Washington offers more inducements for the common industries of life than any other state in the union. The village of Bucoda has fine facilities for a much larger place. The Seatco Manf. Comp. is located here with their large saw mills, which when in full operation employs over 100 men, besides two or more camps where the timber is felled and skidded to the main tramway, where it is worked to the Skookumchuck river by means of ox trains. Then the logs pass into the hands of river men who do nothing else the year round but furnish the mills with logs. At this mill lumber of all kinds is cut and dressed, car siding is made, also timbers 65 feet long for the Chicago Exposition buildings; shingles, lath and M. feet; every variety of building and fancy material. This company can meet short orders promptly. They haye a drying house in which they place at one time three or four car loads of lumber, and when the flame is turned on the heat is very intense. They saw out the lumber from logs drawn from the water and put the lumber in the dryhouse, and, the next morning run it through the striker, and put it aboard the cars and start it for the various points. This lumber is susceptible of a very high grade of polish, and I believe the largest stick which will be seen at the World's Fair will be cut and polished here.

Just above the mills may be seen the Bucoda coal mines. The great yawning mouth constantly spitting out cars loaded with the best coal to be found on the coast. It may be had delivered at your door for $2.50 to $3.00 per ton. These industries together with the hop culture, and sheep ranches, makes this one of the best locations for almost any class of people. I haye heard it said, by some, that the society of the Puget Sound country was of a very low grade. And, that things being new, they were, of course, behind the times. Now the facts are these. In almost every town the size of Delano, we have street cars, and hotel elevators, and every modern improvement, while the people who come here, are those who have some money and want to expand, and are willing to venture a little. I find the society cultured and refined, and fully up to the standard of eastern states. I will, however, admit one thing; there is a tendency on the part of Christian people to become fascinated and inflamed over the prospect of sudden wealth, and loose their ardor for church work, for a time. And yet the churches are, on the whole, too small to accommodate all who wish to attend services.

I forgot to mention the pay roll of Bucoda, I am informed that from the Seatco Comp. and Coal Comp. the pay roll amounts to something like twenty-five thousand per month; and nearly or quite all the men live in Bucoda

We started in the conference year with a seven hundred and twenty dollar debt on church property, which has under God, and by the generous heart of brother Northcroft, one of God's noble laymen, been wiped out. Our Easter services brought us $70.00 for benevolences. Our town has electric lights, and our Epworth League says we will have them in the church soon. This is Apr. 28, Arbor day, and we have just returned from the celebration. It was good to see people from all parts of the city respond to the call, almost every grave in the yard north of town received some token of remembrance in the way of flowers and repairs. It always does us good to stand by the side of those we have loved in life, and love them still in death, our hearts are relieved when we shed a tear and resolve to meet them again. It was good to see some white hand planting a forget-me-not on the grave of some convict who might have laid down in his lonely cell and died without the smile of a sister, or the patient loving hand of a kind mother. We are having fine weather out here, and I wish, Mr. Editor, you were out here to enjoy it with us for a while. And now sir, for fear you may weary with the length of this letter, let me, through the GAZETTE, extend my love to all friends at Delano, and say to them that if I come East this notable year I will surely stop and visit your town.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 5, 1893.

President Cleveland and every member of his Cabinet are again at their desks, all feeling better for their "week off," although none of them got any rest. Still it was a change, and ederybody needs an occasional change. They were one and all pleased to find the government finances in such a satisfactory condition and with prospects of continued improvement. The free gold now amounts to about $3,000,000 and there is a very marked decrease in the demand for gold for shipment to Europe, while offers of gold continue to be made to the Treasury. It is now also known that the close of this fiscal year will find the Treasury with a surplus of nearly $3,000.000 available cash, instead of the deficit which was a short time ago feared.

There have been so many erroneous statements printed about the amount of gold in the United States that the official figures in the latest statement, issued this week, are herewith presented. The total amount of gold coin known to be in this country is $532,513,105, and of gold bullion, the most of which is in the U. S. Treasury, $80,529,774, making a grand total of $613,042,879. Of this gold, National banks hold $190,751,183, and private firms $358,922,385, according to the last report of the director of the U. S. Mint.

Senator McPherson, who is a member of the Senate Finance committe, has been watching the situation very closely, and he says of it: "I do not believe there is anything in the money situation that will necessitate the calling of an extra session of Congress earlier than the President intended—about September 15. The financial condition of the country is all right if the people will only let it alone. The Secretary of the Treasury has the confidence of the public, which believe that he will be able to meet any contingency that may arise."

Congressman John DeWitt Warner, of New York, isn't one of those who think it will require six months or more to get the new tariff bill through Congress. He said: "I see no reason why a tariff bill should not be put through in a month or six weeks after the organization of Congress. The people put the democracy in power with a definite purpose, and that purpose should be carried out. If you hired a contractor to build a house within a specified time, and he failed to keep the agreement, would you not look around to get somebody else to finish it? Of course reasonable time should be allowed for debate on a tariff measure, but all efforts at obstruction should be, and I believe will be promptly squelched."

There are yet some very desirable places in both the diplomatic and consular service to be filled by democrats, and it is expected that most of these appointments will be made by President Cleveland within the next few weeks. In this connection it may be interesting to note how the appointments already made in these branches of the public service have been distributed among the Staes. The diplomatic appointments have gone to the following: Alabama, Tennessee, New Jersey, Delaware, Missouri, Vermont, New Hampshire, California, Massachusetts, Arkansas, Texas South Dakota, and Illinois, one each; Indiana, Georgia, Louisiana, and New York, two each; North Caroliana four and Minnesota five. The Consular appointments have gone one each to North Carolina, Georgia, Illinois, Michigan, and Main; two each to Massachusetts, Missouri, Mississppi, Ohio, and Indiana, and four to New York. While that will probably have little to do with the President's selections, the candidates from those States not mentioned above appear to be more confident than those from the States that have already secured some of these appointments.

The Chinese Minister claims to have information which leads him to fear that a conspiracy exists in the Pacific States to do violence to the Chinese residing in those States, in connection with the enforcement of the Geary exclusion law, which goes into effect tomorrow, and in accordance with his request Secretary Gresham has wired the Governors of those states, asking them to take precautions for the preservation of peace. No steps will be taken by the Treasury Department to prosecute those Chinamen who have failed to comply with the Geary law, by registering, until the case involving the constitutionality of that law shall have been decided by the Supreme Court, which has designated the 10th, inst. to hear the arguments.

President Cleveland has made a few general appointments and appointed a large number of postmasters this week, and it is believed that he is now considering the claims and qualifications of the long list of candidates for the very important position of Public Printer. The lucky man who gets it will have about three thousand places, outside of Civil Service rules, at his disposal.

Truth and Veraciy.

We should distinguish between truth and veracity. A man is veracious when he represents things as they seem to him to be; he speaks the truth when he represents them as they are. Veracity may therefore consist with prejudice, preoccupation, heedless perception, imperfect judgement. Hence the merely veracious man is not alway a safe guide. But he who speaks the truth, that is perceives and reports facts as they are, is the man of the higest quality and deserves to have many followers. Such a man will be a sort of silent prophet who observes and thinks much more than he speaks. There is great room and great need for thought in this wrold, and scarcely less for accurate observation. Our young people can do no better thing than to dig for truth as men dig for hidden treasure. This will give strength to their character and weight to their words.—Methodist Herald.

IT is against the rules of theaters in Russia for the audience to applaud.

THERE are 413,000,000,000 feet of standing timber in the state of Washington.

A RUSSIAN immigrant arrived in New York the other day clad in a long coat made from the skins of more than 1,000 Russian mice.

HORATIO J. SPRAGUE, who represents this country at Gibraltar, is the oldest consul in continuous service. His commission dates from May, 1848.

A NEW YORK man committed suicide the other day though he knew he was to inherit a fortune of $2,000,000. A clearer case of insanity was never recorded.

WILLIAM ORTON, of Reynoldton, Pa., having secured an appointment as police officer, at once resigned, explaining that it wasn't the place he wanted so much as to see how many friends he had. William Orton to act that way.

DR. HAFFKINE, the bacteriologist, who has been investigating cholera, writes from India to the Russian papers that he has conquered the disease by an inoculative method which he will give to the world. He regards his tests in India as conclusive.

OLD LEXINGTON, Mass., celebrated the 118th anniversary of the famous battle, and a modern Paul Revere went dashing along the highways. This is a good precedent to set in this year of jubilation. Every date and event that appeals to the patriotism of the people should be fittingly observed.

CRINOLINE dates from the days of Queen Elizabeth and survived until the commonwealth. It appeared again in 1711 and was enlarged in 1744 and continued to the end of the century. It was abolished by George IV. From 1856 to 1866 it flourished again in all its glory and attained its largest dimensions.

EDISON is a great believer in the healthfulness of variety in diet. He is said to have remarked to his wife shortly after their marriage that he wished it were possible not to eat the same dish twice in a month. It is suspected that a sample of one of her earlier efforts in the pie line led to this observation.

WOMEN doctors say that by going upstairs slowly, with the foot—heel and toe alike—firmly on each stair, one may arrive at the top of four flights of stairs really rested, instead of gasping for breath as when one runs upstairs. Going upstairs is a good form of exercise, if one goes up in the right way to get its benefits.

THE late Abingdon Baird owned an estate of 18,000 acres, valued at $750,000, in Scotland, which he never took the trouble to visit. The man who buys a suburban lot and goes out every Sunday morning to pace off the ground a Queen Anne cottage is to occupy will feel a proper contempt for the memory of the departed spendthrift "sport."

A MISSOURI judge has decided that the municipal law in Kansas City, which requires that every voter who fails to vote must pay a tax of $2.50, is legal. He takes the ground that bad government is liable to exist when conservative men abstain from voting, and it is in the power of a state or a municipality to compel all qualified voters to go to the polls and vote.

LORD TENNYSON left personal property worth $186,000 and landed estates valued at about $1,000,000. Remarkable as it may appear, he earned it all by his writings, for his patrimony was exhausted early in his career. No young man should adopt poetry as a profession on this account, however, for Lord Tennyson was exceptionally skilled in his trade. The vast majority of our aspiring poets must be content with an income of $18 per century from their effusions.

SUSAN B. ANTHONY thinks we are on the verge of an era of unmarried women. Our civilization, she says, is changing. Daughters cannot be supported at home, and there is nothing there to busy them. The women used to spin and weave, make carpets and soap, but now all that is done for them in the factories. Young men do not make enough money to support their wives, and there is such a craze for dissipation among them that the women would rather go into a store for almost nothing than to marry.

A SIMPLE means is used to discover where coal thieves are numerous along the line of some of the Pennsylvania and New Jersey railroads. The coal is merely splashed with whitewash after it has been loaded upon the cars. As coal trains are slow ones and are often sidetracked for days together at obscure places where there are a few or no employes to guard them, the enemies of the coal trust take advantage of these delays to replenish their bins. A glance at a load that has been sprinkled with whitewash shows where coal has been removed, and places where such removals are frequent are guarded.

IT has taken the Kaffir servant girls of South Africa to adopt an original attitude toward that much-enduring person, the "missus." They have formed a union, whose members pledge themselves to take no situation unless the reference of the mistress is satisfactory. "Characters" of mistresses are procured by the members and duly registered for the union's use. It is hardly necessary to add that the mistresses have no voice in the matter. It would be interesting to know what standard of judgment obtains among the average American servant by which to pronounce upon the "character" of her employer.

SANITARY scientists there are in this age of realism who classify the kiss with sewer gas and other agencies by which noxious and infectious disease is propagated. They advocate the abolition of the practice of kissing as a remnant of barbarous ignorance of the laws of health. Such views are due to the germ theory of disease and their transmissible qualities. Prudent parents, under the instruction of physicians, guard their young children jealously against the indiscriminate kissing once in vogue, lest poisonous germs be transmitted to the babies. It is a reasonable precaution, for undoubtedly the danger exists.

FORCED TO SUSPEND.

The Chemical National Bank of Chicago Closes Its Doors—Officials Claim That Its Depositors Will Lose Nothing—The World's Fair Branch Is Secured.

CHICAGO, May 9.—The Chemical national bank of this city, which established a branch at Jackson park, where world's fair concessionaires have been depositing their cash, closed its doors Monday. Officials say that the assets will satisfy the liabilities, but nothing definite in this respect could be discovered by National Bank Examiner Sturges, who was asked to take charge of the affairs of the institution.

The branch of the bank located at the world's fair grounds and which has the exclusive privilege of the banking business at the world's fair has been thoroughly secured by the officers and directors of the main branch. None of the depositors in the world's fair branch of the Chemical can suffer. Every precaution was taken to protect this portion of the bank's patrons, and to prevent any reflection on the financial standing of the world's fair. The capital stock of the bank is $1,000,000.

The cause assigned for the failure is in the placing of bad loans. It is also rumored that the reserve fund has been heavily drawn upon. The recent financial panic in New York may be attributed as one of the causes of the trouble, and in fact it is said that it was through a lack of confidence in the money market that the doors were closed.

It was lowered from the crib above by a large rope, and when they reached the dam the cable stretched, tipping the boat so it stood straight in the air, while the water flowed completely over it. The rocks on it and the waves washed all on board off.

IN THE DEATH CHAIR.

Carlyle W. Harris Electrocuted in Sing Sing Prison—With His Last Breath He Proclaims His Innocence of the Murder of His Wife.

SING SING, N. Y., May 9.—Carlyle W. Harris was executed by electricity in the death house of the prison here at 12:40 o'clock p. m. Monday.

The warden invited the witnesses to go down to the execution chamber at 12:15 o'clock, and at 12:17 the death flag was placed in position to hoist. There were twenty-seven witnesses, including seven physicians and ten newspaper men, the others being state officials and friends of the warden. The witnesses were seated on wooden stools arranged in a half circle at the west end of the room and facing the chair. It was 12:30 when the witnesses entered the room, and Electrician Davis finished testing the apparatus at 12:36 and announced that all was ready.

Harris was awaiting the final summons in his cell, and with him was Chaplain Weills. The condemned man was ready in a moment, and the little procession was quickly formed by Head Keeper Connaughton and two guards. Harris looked slight and pale as he stepped into the room, and pausing an instant on the threshold he looked calmly over the assembled witnesses. Warden Durston had asked the reporters to conceal their pads, saying: "Harris might not like it." The pads were put out of sight. Harris walked entirely alone, just behind Connaughton, who pointed him to the chair, and without even a look of curiosity at the thing which was to end his career, he dropped in the seat.

As he did so he began to talk in a low voice, and, in a weak voice, as though each word cost him a powerful effort, said: "I have no further reservation to make. I desire to say that I am absolutely innocent." These were his last words. After uttering them he seemed relieved and settled back in the chair to which his legs and arms had already been strapped. The electrodes were then attached to his right leg, which was bared to the knee, and the helmet containing the other electrode was placed on his head.

Electrician Davis attached the wires to the electrodes, and the guards stepped back. Davis, who had gone to the switch board, then said: "All ready." There was an instant of pause. At 12:40½ a current of 1,760 volts passed through the body of Carlyle Harris. In two seconds Davis threw the switchboard back, and only 150 volts were on. Dr. Daniels still held his hand aloft and one finger pointed above as though to indicate that the soul of the man in the chair had passed upward. Then his arm fell and in just 55⅘ seconds the current was shut off. The life of Carlyle Harris was extinct, and it was plain to all present that death had come at the first touch of the current.

Drs. Irvine and Habershaw immediately stepped forward and examined the body, which had settled back limp in the chair. Life was extinct, and it was plain to all who were present that death had come at the first touch of the current. All the physicians present expressed themselves as satisfied that death had been instantaneous. When all had examined the body Dr. Daniels turned to the witnesses and said: "That is all." The witnesses who had seen other electrocutions agreed that this was the most successful one yet.

Mrs. Harris viewed the raising of the black flag from the window of her room in a boarding house. When the ominous signal floated on the soft breeze she turned quietly away, resigned and calm as she has been for the last few days.

The crime for which Carlyle W. Harris was electrocuted attracted an extraordinary amount of attention. The desperate fight for her boy's life made by his mother and the equally desperate fight for his conviction made by the murdered girl's mother has intensified the dramatic interest of the trial to a wonderful degree.

Born in Glen Falls, N. Y., of a fine family, he lived with his mother in Brooklyn after she separated from his father. Mrs. Harris was poor and Carlyle passed through the stages of book-agent, clerk and actor, before he took up the study of medicine at 19. In 1889 they went to Ocean Grove, N. J., to live, and there he met Mary Helen Potts, the murdered girl. She was pretty and he took a fancy to her. Pretty girls were a weakness of his and his reputation in that direction was rather unsavory. The girl's mother refused to sanction their engagement, as while in Ocean Grove Harris ran a gambling house and saloon. After the return to New York Harris and Miss Potts were secretly married and in a little while he began to neglect her. She was in a delicate condition and an operation was performed to conceal her condition after she had informed a friend of hers of the marriage, in case she should die. Afterward her uncle, a physician, discovered her state of health, and she confessed the marriage. Her mother demanded a public marriage, but Harris put it off. At the time he was carrying on an intrigue with a woman in Canandaigua, N. Y. Tired of the affair, he gave his girl-wife some morphine pills for a headache. They killed her and he added to his infamy by claiming that she was a morphine-eater and had simply taken an overdose. He was very unconcerned over her death and repeatedly insisted that the medicine he gave her was all right.

His suspicious conduct and other circumstances of the case convinced Mrs. Potts that Harris had poisoned her daughter. She told the whole story to States Attorney Nicoll, and on May 13, following the girl's death, Harris was indicted. He was brought to bar in January, 1892, and after a trial of three weeks' duration was convicted. Sentence of death was pronounced and the date of execution was fixed for March 21. The case then went to the court of appeals, by which the decision of the lower court was affirmed. Harris' attorneys then moved for a new trial, but this was overruled. Petitions for executive clemency were at once put in circulation and very numerously signed. The governor appointed a referee to take the evidence which the defense claimed to have found, but after reading it he found no ground for interference.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Teachers' Congress.

D. L. Kiehle, superintendent of instruction, has changed his plans somewhat for the teachers' summer training schools. As finally decided upon, the training schools in the several counties of the state will open on July 19, and the school at the university about a week later. This will carry the latter a week farther into the summer than the former and enable all the teachers who may desire to do so to come to Minneapolis for a final congress, to which the final week will be devoted. One day will be given over to the discussion of the county superintendents' work, from a purely educational standpoint, and will be led by some noted educator from the East. Another day will be given up to the consideration of state reading in the schools, and a fourth to the high schools. The closing day will be devoted to a discussion of the state university and the educational system of the state as a whole. Each day will be in charge of some noted educator, who will come from the world's fair for that purpose, and the congress will be one of the most interesting things of the kind ever offered to the teachers of the northwest.

Gov. Nelson Threatened.

Gov. Nelson is to die. So says a person who signs himself with the terrible number 13. This unlucky number is the name chosen by an avenger of the people who have been wronged by the governor in his recent signing of a number of "boodle and monopoly measures" as the letter of this above mentioned avenger calls them. The deadly document closes with the following words:

"Now, Knute Nelson, we are compelled by the rules of our order to give a man ample time to prepare his worldly affairs and to make peace with his Maker. You are a marked man—do not expect any mercy—we are neither Mafia nor Clan-na-Gael, but a greater power and one you cannot escape from. Nothing will save you. "No. 13."

Crushed by Electric Cars.

Mrs. Susan Bishop, of Minneapolis, was killed by an interurban car near Hamline avenue. The story of the motoneer is that the woman was first seen walking in the avenue between the tracks. He sounded the gong and put on the brake, and as the car neared the woman she walked across the track to the north side of the street. Just before the car reached her she started back and stepped directly in front of the car. The motoneer made an effort to stop the car, but it was too late to prevent the woman being struck. The car was stopped as soon as possible and the injured woman taken on board. It was intended to take her to the car barn and summon medical attendance, but before the barn was reached she was dead.

Appointed.

Gov. Nelson has appointed the new board of managers of the state institution for the insane, under the law for reorganizing the same. Three of the five are reappointments of old members of the board, to-wit: J. S. Meaghan, of Mankato, for one year; J. W. Mason, of Fergus Falls, for two years; John Peterson, of St. Peter, for three years. The two new members are: C. H. Titus of Rochester, for one year, and Dr. W. A. Jones, of Minneapolis, for two years.

An Indian soldier was struck by the Milwaukee passenger train near Fort Snelling and seriously injured. He was walking along the track and paid no attention to the approaching train. His right leg was badly mangled, and his head bruised.

The Eastern Baptist association met at Hastings. Fifty delegates from Duluth, St. Paul, Lake City and churches adjacent were present. J. H. Randall and F. R. Leach, of St. Paul, were re-elected moderator and clerk respectively. Visitors were hospitably entertained by members of the church.

Assignee Brown, of the Bank of Fairfax, asked for an order of court that he be allowed to sell the property. The order was granted, and Albert E. Clark and W. F. Booth, of Minneapolis, purchased the property for $2,500. A new bank will be started with a capital of $25,000.

Dr. Livingstone, of Wells, was cleared of the charges made by his neighbors to the state board of medical examiners. The charges were that the physician had been guilty of habitual drunkenness and immoral practices.

ORGANS are without question the BEST. They have taken HIGHEST HONORS AT ALL GREAT WORLD'S EXHIBITIONS, and for forty years best musicians have declared them superior to all others.

Don't be bumbugged into buying inferior organs which are flooding the country. They are put in ORGANS to showy, flashy cases, while the interior, or musical portion—the chief thing in any musical instrument—is unscientifically and poorly made. In quality of tone and durability they don't compare with Mason & Hamlin ORGANS, yet the latter are but little higher in price. THE FLOWERS WITH FACES.

What are your thoughts as you blossom, sweet flowers,
And bask in the sunshine through bright summer days?
Smiling and growing through many long hours,
Uplifting your faces to greet the sun's rays.

What do I see in your sweet little faces?
Dainty they are in their tints manifold.
Lessons for all in the world's busy places,
Colors blue, white, royal purple and gold.

Smiling though drear be the weather and cheerless,
Lifting your heads to the rain's cooling shower;
Gem of the flowery creation—thou'rt peerless;
Surely has Flora blessed thee with a dower.

Thy resting-place lowly, still upward thou'rt gazing,
Thy magnet the sun, and thy balm fresh'ning showers;
Fair example of purity! All should be praising
This loveliest one of the summer's fair flowers.

Give me pansies all shades, from the white to the golden,
The purple and blue and each hue that they wear;
For no others I care. Oh! their dainty sweet faces
In life and in death my affections shall share.

HIS ROMANCE.

It Is That of an Old Head But a Young Heart.

This is the romance of a middle-aged man—the romance of an old head and a young heart. I am gray-haired and forty, and yet as I sit at my desk in the gloomy little office of Harman's mill, a face comes between my eyes and the columns of figures in the dusty ledgers—a young face with clear, bright eyes—and I fall into a day-dream and forget that I am old and poor and commonplace.

She is the only child of Jere Harman, the millionaire mill-owner, and as gentle and good as she is beautiful.

I have watched her grow into womanhood. I have watched her character deepening and widening and developing toward the ideal of my dreams.

And all these years I have been learning to love her.

Surely love is not wholly wasted though it is hopeless. I am a better man that I have loved Nellie Harman.

No. I build no air-castles.

I am forty and she eighteen.

I am only her father's bookkeeper and she is the heiress of millions.

There was a time when little Nellie Harman rode on my shoulder, hunted my pockets for goodies, and escaped her nurse's charge several times a day to toddle down to the mill in search of "her Jack Spencer." Daily she brought her school tasks, the incorrigible Latin verbs and the unconquerable examples in fractions, to the same old friend, who was never too busy to be bothered by little Nellie Harman.

She is as unaffected and cordial in her friendliness as ever, and sometimes when she lays her hand on my arm and looks up into my face and asks why I come so seldom to the hall, and have I grown tired of old friends, of her—then I find it hard to answer lightly, to smile calmly, and I go away with a heartache.

The girl does not lack for friends. Grim, stern old Jere Harman's little bright-faced child, motherless since her babyhood, long ago found a tender spot in the hearts of the village folk. In the cottages her face is as welcome as sunshine. The children hang on her gown, the women sing her praises, and the roughest mill hand has always a civil word for her, and a lift of the cap as she passes.

She has her young friends, too, among the country gentlefolk. Young Harry Desmond is often at the hall. It is rumored that he is the fortunate suitor of Jere Harman's heiress. He is a fresh-faced, good-hearted lad. Love is for youth, and they are young together.

Gray-haired Jack Spencer, what have you to do with "love's young dream?"

The strike!

The mill is shut down and the strikers gather in knots along the village street and discuss the situation. The cut-rates have caused the trouble. Jere Harman is a hard man and a hard master. He holds the fate of these people in his hands. A few cents less to them, a few dollars more to him. This seemed to him to settle the question. The times were dull—he would reduce wages. The Harman mill operatives went out in a body.

The first day of the strike Big John, the weaver, who headed the strikers, came to Jere Harman with a delegation to arbitrate the matter.

To them Harman said: "Return to work at my terms or stay out and starve. Monday I hire new hands if you are not back in your places. As long as I own this mill I shall be master here."

This was his final answer, and no words of mine, no warnings of the murmurs and threats that grow and deepen among the men, will shake his will.

There is talk of firing the mill among the mad-brained ones, but Big John shakes his head.

"That were chopping the nose off to spite the face, men. If the mill were burnt how would that help us to work and wages? Nay; it must be other means."

"Aye, we must live; but if we do not get our rights by fair means we will have them by foul," cried another.

They mean mischief. I have warned Jere Harman, but he will not heed.

The strike is over.

The night is ended, and I sit alone in the office in the gray dawn, sick and dizzy with the horrors of the night's experience. I shut my eyes and the picture stands out before me—the dark night, the hall with its lights glowing out through the windows, the gay party of young people in the drawing-room; the gleam of the torches outside, the mob of desperate men, the angry, upturned faces. There was a tramp of feet, hoarse shouts, and a stone crashed through a window and shattered the chandelier.

The music stopped with a discordant crash. There was instant confusion, and above it all there were the hoarse cries for Jere Harman.

I sprang through the piazza window and faced the men. They knew me well, and Big John shouted:

"We've naught against you, John Spencer. We mean no harm to any, but the master must hear us. Bring out the master!"

"Come, like honest men, in daylight, and talk it over calmly," I urged; "not at night, like a mob of ruffians with stones for arguments."

Jere Harman had come out to them. They greeted him with an angry shout: "We are to be put off no longer. Is it our rights by fair means or by foul, Jere Harman?"

"Your rights—," began Jere Harman in his harsh stern voice. I saw that Nellie Harman had slipped out to her father's side and laid her hand pleadingly on his shoulder. She did not fear the angry men, for willingly not one of them would have harmed a hair of her dainty head. I saw that she would have pleaded with her father to be gentle with them.

"Yes, our rights!" yelled a voice in the crowd, with an awful oath. He was drunken or blind with rage—surely he did not see the girl at her father's side. A stone whizzed through the air. It might have been Jere Harman's death-blow; instead, it struck her. It cut a great, cruel gash just above the temple.

They sprang toward her—her friends, her lover—but Nellie Harman put her two hands out to me with a sharp gasping cry.

"Jack, Jack!" she said, and I caught her in my arms.

I have lived over the agony, the joy, of that moment, all through the long, lonely hours of this night.

It was Big John himself who brought the doctor and cried like a child when they told him she was dying. His little crippled child she had loved and cared for, and it had died in her arms. "Aye, and that harm should have come to her, who was more good and innocent of wrong than the angels!" muttered Big John, brokenly, as he went away softened and sorrowful.

Jere Harman sent me out to tell the men that he had yielded, and in the silence of death they went away.

The strike is over.

As I sit here in the gray dawn, waiting, fearing, dreading the coming of the morning and the news it may bring, I hear the clatter of horses' hoofs. It is a servant from the Hall riding to the village on some errand.

"What news?" I call out hoarsely, and learn that the worst is over and that she will live.

Nellie Harman hovered between life and death for long weeks, and I worked as I had never worked before. Jere Harman left much of the management of the mill in my hands, and I put heart and brain in the work or I should have gone mad in those weeks with the longing to see her face. When she was well again I spent many evenings at the Hall, talking business with her father, who came seldom to the office in those days. He had broken in health with the recent troubles and had lost energy, but he was gentler and kinder than of old.

Harry Desmond was always there. I was but a dull guest. I could not endure his light-heartedness, the triumph in his eyes, the happiness in his laugh. I could not endure that he should call her by name or smile on her.

I was a mad fool!

I told Jere Harman that I must go away; that I must have rest, change—a vacation. Gordon, the young foreman, could take my place, I urged, and he consented, though grudgingly.

The last evening I promised him to spend at the hall and go over the accounts with him.

Never had Nellie been brighter or gayer. I felt a vague pang that my going was so little to her.

It was early when Desmond left, and I immediately rose to go. Jere Harman grasped my hand cordially in farewell, and Nellie said simply "Good-by," and I went down the path slowly and sadly.

Suddenly I heard a light, flying step behind me as I reached the shadow of the trees.

It was Nellie.

I stepped back in the darkness. She stopped, as if listening, and then came toward me.

"I thought I should overtake you," she whispered, slipping her arm through mine. "Did you think I could let you go away to-night without a last word?" There was something in her voice, a tenderness, that explained all. She had come out to meet her lover, Desmond, and mistaken me for him in the darkness. But to have her so near was very sweet. She seemed not to care for speech. She was very still—just clasping my arm and leaning ever so gently against my shoulder. The temptation was great—I was going away—just to take away with me the memory of a moment's heaven!

I kissed her.

"Forgive me," I pleaded, desperately. "You thought me your lover, Desmond, and I was cruel, mad, to take that kiss. Nellie, forgive me."

"But I kissed you, Jack," she whispered. "And you won't go—oh, Jack! you won't go when I love you so."

Jack Spencer, gray-haired and forty, commonplace and poor—she loved him!

That is my romance.—M. A. Worswick, in Frank Leslie's Weekly.

Good Talker.

Kenny Meadows was an artist who was always welcome at any social gathering, for he had an infinite fund of quotation and mother-wit. A certain well known studio pun was his. There had been one day a long talk about fresco and the palette necessary for it, and the repeated remark that it needed a palette of earths quite tired him out.

"You talk of ochres," he said, "but the worst of all you haven't named, though it's the commonest. That's the mediocre!"

"Then," said another artist, "you don't believe in the golden means being the best of things?"

"No," said he, "I'll divide that with you. You may take the mean, I'll keep the gold."

"Now I dare say you think yourself a very clever fellow to paint so good a picture," he said to his friend, William Bell Scott, who had just completed his "Old English Ballad Singer." "But it's nothing to paint a picture compared with what it is to sell it. When you do that I'll congratulate you!"

But every one knew just how much such deprecatory criticism meant. Meadows was "fond of talking."—Youth's Companion.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Cupped Eggs: Butter half a dozen egg-cups, break a fresh egg into each, set in a steamer over boiling water until the whites are cooked. Serve in the cups.—Harper's Bazar.

—An easy and good dessert is bananas sliced in thin round slices, with sugar and orange juice over them and served with whipped cream. Get your dealer to give you Aspinwall bananas if he can and will, and you never will take any other.—N. Y. Times.

—Fruit Bread Pudding: Half a pound of finely-grated bread crumbs. Half a pound of finely-chopped apples. Four eggs. Six ounces of sugar. Two ounces of citron. Half a pound of finely-chopped suet. Half a pound of currants. A little nutmeg and lemon peel. Boil three hours.—Ladies' World.

—Bakers' Yeast: Boil six potatoes, mash them, add two level cups flour and pour upon it a hot tea made of a handful of hops and water enough to make a strong tea. It should be strained before being poured on the flour and potatoes. When milk-warm add a cup of yeast or two dissolved yeast cakes.—Detroit Free Press.

—Pudding Sauce: Separate the whites and yolks of three eggs; beat the whites to a stiff froth. Care must be taken to beat eggs in a cool dish with a cool beater. To the stiff froth add one cupful of sugar, folding the mixture with the spoon, not stirring; pour in the yolks and beat rapidly, adding the vanilla. This must be made just before serving.—N. Y. Observer.

—Rice Toast with Poached Egg: Boil the rice the night before it is to be used; put it into a bread-loaf pan and keep on ice; the next morning cut it in slices, brush a little melted butter over the broiler and the sliced rice, and broil, or rather toast, before the fire. When done butter the slices, place on each a poached egg; spot the top of the egg with a little black pepper and serve.—Boston Budget.

—Sauce for all Kinds of Fish: Take some mutton broth or veal gravy, and put to it a little of the liquor which drains from the fish. Put it in a saucepan, with an onion, an anchovy and a spoonful of catsup. Thicken with a lump of butter rolled in flour, and a spoonful of cream. Oysters, cockles or shrimps may be put in after it is taken off the fire, but it is very good without.—Good Housekeeping.

—Baked Ham Hash: Mince cold, boiled ham after taking off nearly all of the fat and mix with it a pint of bread crumbs and a tablespoonful of flour. Place it in a pudding dish with bits of butter and season with pepper and a little cayenne. Nearly fill the dish with milk, cover and set in the oven to bake. In twenty minutes remove the cover and brown the top.—Orange Judd Farmer.

—Savory Steak: Put several thin slices of nice bacon in a hot frying pan, and when beginning to curl, add two good-sized white onions, or a single small Spanish onion cut in rings; when beginning to brown, add a pound of lean steak cut into collops and beaten with the back of a knife until the fiber is somewhat broken; season with pepper and salt, and when this, also, is cooked a rich brown, add sufficient water to form a rich gravy; simmer until the meat is tender, sprinkle over a tablespoonful of minced parsley and the juice of half a lemon. The fact that this recipe was given a friend by a native cook of Brazil will not, we hope, prejudice anyone against it as a "foreign mess" until they have tried it.—American Agriculturist.

To Clean Paint.

A good many housewives attack the paint with materials and an energy which wear away considerable portion of the coat, in the mistaken idea that this is necessary in order to remove the dirt. Nothing could be a greater mistake. All foreign matter which has become attached to the paint can be removed by a right course of treatment, without injury to the film. In the case of an unpainted board the conditions are different, as the grime has become imbedded in the grain of the wood, and it may be necessary to scour the surface to eliminate the dirt; but on the painted surface, the application of a thorough detergent, followed by an adequate rinsing, will bring out the purity and brightness of the paint, with the minimum of injury to its texture. Nothing is better for this purpose than the addition of two or three spoonfuls of borax to each pailful of warm water. Then go over it again with plain, warm water and wipe as nerly dry as practicable.—Good Housekeeping.

Disinfectants.

All the powerful and really useful disinfectants corrode metal and stain crockery more or less. Copperas is the best for household use, one pound dissolved in twelve quarts of boiling water, and used hot, being more effective than cold. The valve should be open when it is poured down closets, so that it need not settle in the pan, which should be washed daily with a long-handled dishmop kept for the purpose and scalding, strong suds, when it will need no further disinfection. A large funnel should be set in the pipe of stationary washbowls, which, by the way, are unfit for human habitations and unknown in the best modern houses. When the fine Astor mansion was built uptown the owners positively forbade a single stationary bowl in the dressing-rooms, an example which has since been followed in other high-class houses.—St. Louis Republic.

The World's Inn.

There can be no doubt that the "World's Inn," under the management of Mr. Chas. E. Leland, (of the noted Leland family of hotelkeepers) is one of the reliable exposition hotels in Chicago. The appointments are perfect, the location unequaled, and, in view of the fact that the building is absolutely fireproof, the rates—$2 per day for each person, two persons in a room—are remarkably liberal. Scores of hotels erected in the World's Fair territory are veritable firetraps. The "World's Inn," on the other hand, affords security to life and property. The location, directly opposite the Fair grounds, and in close proximity to steam and street cars, adds to its attractiveness. Although it contains 800 commodious rooms, it is only three stories high, an advantage that will be appreciated at once. Rooms may now be secured by mail or telegraph to Chas. E. Leland, Manager, The World's Inn, 60th St. and Madison Ave., Chicago.

SPURGEON WROTE

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man. Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.

Yours heartily,
(Rev.) C. H. SPURGEON,

DELANO DIARY

—If you want brick go to John Coolen's.

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

—E. S. Farnham has rented rooms in the Renswick building and now occupies them.

—The G.N.R.R. has had a good job done here in draining the lake that has stood under the depot most of the spring.

—Mrs. Eppler has rented her place here and moved her family to the Midway district between St. Paul and Minneapolis.

—Our street comissioner has had a crew of men at work, on the streets, and they look much more citified than they did.

—Corey has moved his store into Mowatt's building until he closes out the balance of the stock.

—Paul Janikula with three teams loaded with household goods, left this morning for Minneapolis, where he will reside for awhile.

—Mrs. J. M. Cruikshank has moved into the J. F. Powers house near the school house. Mr. P. is established on the south side of the track.

—The Monthly Fair was not very largely attended last Saturday, people being anxions to get their seeding done probaly that accounts for it.

—Our village would make a good point for almost any line of maufacture that could be named a beet sugar factory, a paper mill, a carrige shop a bakery.

—We understand the city council have ordered no more manure and refuse matter dumped in Elm street near the school house. A wise move in the interest of health and comfort of those living or passing near that point.

—Most of the farmers in this neighborhood have improved the few warm days of the past week and finished up seeding. Grain sown before our last attack of winter, is coming up, nicely, and bids fair to yield a good crop.

—The Supper and Concert at the City Hall last Friday evening passed of nicely. The entertainment was fine. The visitors from abroad who assisted in making the entertainment a success were voted the thanks of the audience. Net proceeds about $25.00 —Neighboring towns are preparing to observe Decoration day as if they had not forgotten her soldier boys who have died and passed into the hearafter. It seems as if Delano should, being the largest town in the county, do as well as any in this respect.

—Miss Hannah and John O'Leary had the remains of their father, the late Timothy O'Leary which had lain for the past seventeen years in the Catholic cemetry west of town exhumed and taken to Minneapolis, this week, where they will be placed beside of other relatives.

—As yesterdays train came around the bend west of town a drunken man was seen on the R. R. bridge with a wheelbarrow. The whistle was blown and bell rung, but he seemed determined to keep the track, until some bystander went to him and literally dragged him out of the way. A dangerous place for drunken men.

—The Eagle, this week, classes Dr. Catlin as "impracticable" and "cranky". If objecting to building "iron" bridges by arranging things after the Eagle plan; if objecting to voting on school business with "yellow" and "white" tickets; If objecting to giving I. Gutzwiller, Jr., a few thousand dollars bonus to build a paper mill, which he can as well build himself if he sees fit, is cranky, and impracticable perhaps the old bird is right.

—The Delano Public School now has one of the finest school libraries in the State. The new books have been selected with care, and are such as will add much to the stock of information of the pupils. There is in all about 225 volumes. A card is sold for 5 cents which enables the purchaser to have the use of 9 books for two weeks each. Prof. Dewey has made arrangements to have it in use during the summer vacation. Patrons of the school will be allowed books on the same terms.

—In last week's article in the GAZETTE concerning the Post Office situation appeared the following which we desire to correct: "Mrs. O'Hair informs us that she is bound to get it inspite of the republicans and mugwump democrats while Charley Belt was in the field watching for chances." Owing to typographical errors, common in printing offices, two sentences were run into one. It should have read "Mrs. O'Hair informs us that she is bound to get it in spite of the republicans and mugwump democrats." While Charley Belt is in the field watching for chances. Of course she had reference to her husbands candidacy for the office, not being an office seeker herself.

—If you need lime, call on John Coolen. 27.

—Read the Town Clerk's notice to Contractors.

—Mr. Tompers and family expect to move to Minneapolis to-morrow.

—Read the interesting letter from our former pastor now of the "Evergreen State."

—We understand Charley Teas, of Watertown, will act as Drum Major at the Band Tournament on June 2, in Delano.

—Casper Janikula is repairing his new purchase, the Johny Arup building and will soon move his family and his store into it.

—Ascension Day was duly observed by the Catholic congregation here yesterday. Teams lined the streets during church hours.

—In another column will be found a communication from W. Sydney Belt, of Woodland, on the interesting topic "The Gold Basis System."

—A meeting will be held at the City Hall, on Tuesday evening, May 16, at 8 o'clock. Let those interested and willing to aid in observing Decoration day, be present.

—People from down the river have to patronize the Delano mill during the high water. One farmer informed us that he had a grist at Volbrecht's, one at Florida's, and a third he brought here and waited till it was ground.

—Last week's Eagle wants to know where would a wooden bridge have been now? We presume it would have stood the strain as well as did the Sampsell, the McKinley or any other wooden bridge on the stream. But we have an "iron" one now, and when the water was highest it was not safe to drive to or from it on the west side of the river.

County Cullings.

Mayor Quinn, of Waverly, returned home Tuesday, from the cities, with a plan for the new city hall which is, in the near future, to loom up in that thriving village.

The depot at Waverly was consumed by fire on the night of Monday, May 8th. The villagers are not sorry, as they expect a more commodious and ornamental structure to take its place.

The reception at the home of Commissioner Flannigan, of Waverly, to occur on the 16th inst., and to which abont 200 guests have been invited by J. F. McDonnell, bids fair to be a grand occasion. Every town in the county is to be represented.

The Minneapolis Times had, in its picture gallery of Minnesota Editors, one day lately, a picture of C. A. French, of the "Monticello News." It must be the Minneapolis editor's acquaintance with Wright county journalism is incomplete.

The Wright county Cornet Band Association Tournament to be held in Delano, June 2nd, is to be something more than usual in this part of the country. Over 75 musicians are to participate. Read their advertisement in another column, and try to find time to drive over with your family and see the sights and hear the music.

Reports concerning damage done to bridges, mills and other property along Crow River was rather premature. It seems now, that the waters have subsided, that people can cross over the Sampsell bridge, or the Hanover bridge, both of which were reported as carried away. And Vollbrecht's mill that was said to be carried away, will we are told, be ready, in a few days to do their share of grinding.

Word was received here yesterday that Rev. Wellcome of Monticello had died at his sons home in San Jose, Cal. He and his wife had gone in company with Mrs. Fred Wellcome to that place and on the trip he was taken sick and died shortly after his arrival His remains will be brought to Monticello for bural. Rev. Wellcome has been a resident of Modticello for sometime and was much respected by the citizens of that place and all his acquaintances who will mourn his sudden taking off.—Buffalo Journal.

Thomas J. McDermott was up from St. Paul on Sunday, the guest of his mother. He is one ot three or four leading candidates for the position of superintendent of railway mail service for the N. W. division and stands an excellent chance of securing it. Tom is one of the brightest boys in the state and an awful hard worker, as well as an honest, industrious and sober fellow. We hope he may get the position for he deserves it.—St. Peter Herald.

Mr. McDermid will be remembered as one of the most courteous of the mail clerks on our line of railway last fall. And the man who graduated in law, while keeping up his end of the mail run, which most of the men consider quite enough business for one, to say nothing of the Blackstone part.

Mr. Warren Wakfield, your article in the Eagle had no more effect on the GAZETTE than a hand full of peas on a large piece of iron. But I think if you would take some "minute pills" in stead of telling others to take "Carters little liver pills," and help the Jr. (I. G.) of the eagle, fumigate himself it would not cost him $3. per day to live. A. G. C.

The Gold Basis System.

EDITOR GAZETTE: The present great stringency in the money market ought to prove conclusively to any fair-minded person, the fallacy of a nation's endeavoring to do business on a gold basis; for the present great financial depression is irrefragably the result of this system. History proves the fact that no nation on earth can maintain a gold basis system and be truly prosperous, and that the United States should be compelled to transact less than ten percent of its business on a cash basis, and that we are contemplating the issueing of bonds to keep afloat reflects no great credit on the financial ability of our statesmen.

In the first place there is not enough gold. Why, if the world would pay three cents on the dollar of its gold interest bearing bonded debt, it would bankrupt every civilized nation on God's green earth! Under this system England and the Rothchilds pratically control the world. They own 28 billions of bonds, the interest and principal of which are payable in gold and control $3,000,000,000 of the $3,750,000,000 of gold in the world, leaving $750,000,000, with which to transact most of the world's business, and pay interest on upwards of 40 billions of bonds,—a pretty system, truly!

We think it can easily be proved that gold is not the only sound money; that intrinsic value is not essential to good money; and that making it a full legal tender is all that makes any money "sound." In 1863 Congress made $60,000,000 in Greenbacks a full legal tender; and these full legal tender bills remained at par with gold, and at one time even commanded a premium above gold, while the limited legal tender Greenbacks went down to 36 cents on the dollar. Both kinds were based on coin. Now, was it the coin basis, intrinsic value, or legal tender qualities, that kept the former with gold while the latter depreciated? Let common sense answer.

In 1873 a great conspiracy was formed among the bond holders to demonetize silver—a conspiracy compared with which the conspiracy of Pizzaro or even King Ethelred, was a mere bagatelle. This base and treacherous act robbed the people of over half their legal tender circulating medium; caused financial ruin and widespread suffering; and enabled the great English Octopus to more firmly coil its slimy tentacles about the necks of the American toiler. The man who cannot learn a lesson from these things would better apply for admission to a lunatic asylum. Before silver was demonetized it commanded a premium above gold for export; as soon as it was demonetized it gradually depreciated. Demonetize gold and it will drop to 60 per cent of its present value.

It is folly for the goverment to keep 600 millions locked up in its vaults when the cry of "hard times" is heard from salt shore to salt shore. What the goverment needs to do now, is, not to issue bonds, which is worse than useless, but to issue a sufficient amount of the legal tender notes, based, not on gold but on the wealth of the nation, in order to relieve the financial strain, and prevent a financial crash.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

CARMENTS OF PRAISE.

BY CHAS. A. FOSS.

Settin' in my pew las' Sunday ez the firs' notes uv the bell
That was callin' us t' worship on the mornin' air had fell;
I couldn't help but notice ez they passed up throo the aisle,
That the wimmin folks wuz all togged out in most amazin' style;
Bran' new-fangled gowns n, bunnits that ez plainly seemed to say
Ez though they talked—"this is our first—we're out for Easter-day"
'N I ruther liked t' watch 'em fer they did look neat 'n sweet,
But Samanthy—thet's my wife—wuz occupyin' half the seat,
'N she nudged me with her elbow ez she whispered in my ear—
I jes think, Josiah Allen, thet its pretty mighty near
T' bein' sacrilligious, when they come 't sech a place
T' display their lates' fummeries in ribbons 'n in lace—
Nd especially on sech a sollum day ez this should be,
How they kin show sech vanity is more than I kin see."
Wal, thet way of lookin' at it ruther took me back a bit,
But before the sarmon started I got in a thinkin fit:
'N ez near ez I kin figger, when the parson riz t' pray
I hed come t' this conclusion about style on Easer-day—
Ef th' earth hes changed her garments in the sober months thet's past,
'N is puttin' on spring fashions 't rejoice our hearts at last;
Ef God's handiwork in such a change sings glory to his name.
Why can't his luvliest handiwork—the wimmin—do the same?
'Nd besides Isaiee tells us 't put on the robes uv praise.
'Nd 't lay aside the spirit uv the heaviness uv days—
So on the hull I thought Samanthy's sentiments wuz wrong,
(Although I didn't tell her so—bin married mos' too long)
Fer it makes but little differenee 'bout the fashion t' our sight,
Ef the fashion uv the heart within the eyes uv God is right.

FLOODS are devastating the country in northeastern Ohio and in Pennsylvania. Many lives have been lost and much property destroyed.

THE Supreme Court have decided with the State court in the case of the Sabin Company at Stillwater, that the stock holders cannot be sued.

MINNESOTA editors had a little time of their own, by way of a house warming in the Minnesota headquarters at World's Fair. The formal opening is to occur in June.

SOME of the papers are finding fault with our Governor, Knute 1, for going back on his adopted country that has honored him, by attending a Norwegian doings in Chicago instead of taking part in the Editorial House warming of the Minnesota building at the World's Fair.

THE announcement was made that the new Commissioner of Pensions. Judge Lochren, will follow the precedent established by his immediate predecessor and make the boards of Pension Examiners conform to his way of thinking as far as possible. That will necessitate an entire change of the Wright County board.

THE Supreme Court of the U. S. does not appear to be entarely harmonious in its construction of law at the present time. The majority reported in favor of the excluding of Chinese from our shores. And again in the case of Baugh vs. The Ohio R. R. Co. the majority is charged by Justice Field in his minority report in the following strong terms: "I regret that the tendency of the decison of the majority of the court in this case is in favor of the largest exemptions of corporation from liability. The principle in the Ross case covers this case and requres, in my opinion, a, judgement of affirmance."

CONSIDERABLE is being said concerning the appointments of Post Masters. It has been claimed that no drinking man need apply; that no man who is in business, so that he cannot give it his personal attention will be given an office; that a former Post Master will not be re-appointed where there is an objection filed. And now comes the news that the present incumbents are to have a life tenure unless discharged for cause. At Duluth it is claimed the charges have been referred to a republican Post Master for adjudication. It does begin to look as if the people wanted a change a great deal worse than the Administration does.

THE majorty report of the Supreme Court says the Geary law for the exporting of un-registered Chinamen from this country is constitutional. Three dissenting members, among them Chief Justice Fuller, think differently. strong reasons are given for not establishing a precedent in excluding Chinese from our shores. The question are who will be the next? What will be the next excuse for moving people out of the country? And how long befor our turn will come? Congress appropriatid $100,000 for carrying the Chinamen back to their native homes. Secretary Carlisle has shown that but 16,000 of this remains available for the purpose. and as it is estimated that 6,000,000 would be required to transport them all it is likly to be sometime before the law is enforced. it is likely to be revoked first.

WE are creditably informed that a Henepin Co. teacher, the holder of a first grade certificate bearing the signature of James A. Lewis, and who has ever been, and now is a staunch friend of Bayard T. Shaver, the deposed assistant superintendent of schools, disapproves of Lewis' action in revoking Mr Kennedy's certificate. The teacher we refer to has taught for the past two years, with marked success, in one of the largest rural schools in Hennepin county. He has made a reputation in Hennepin county that would secure for him the principalship of any village school within twenty miles, in any direction, from the place where he has been employed for the past two years. But he says be will leave Hennepin county. He considers Sup't Lewis a man utterly devoid of manly principal. He wants it distinctly understood that he will not, henceforth, have anything whatever to do with the superintendent, if he can help it, and is returning his letters unopened.

Reception at Waverly.

The reception held on Tuesday evening at the residence of commissioner Flannigan, at Waverly, was a grand success. The weather was such as we have in Minnesota in the spring time; with just enough crisp to make it enjoyable. The spacious grounds were in good condition and being lighted by Chinese lanterns plentiously hung from numerous trees furnished promenades for the guests and a fine opportuuity for the Waverly Silver Cornet Band dressed in their bright new uniforms to pour forth their sweetest strains which they did to the delight of many lovers of music. The commodians residence was filled to overflowing with invited guests who vied with each other in enjoying the sociable, good time, visiting with old friends, and forming new acquaintances. J. F. Mc Donnell was in the very hight of his glory when decorated with a big boquet he could in his politest style accompany some bashful man through the different apartments and in his suavest manner introduce him to bevy after bevy of blushing maidens and demure dams, arrayed almost like lillie's of the field's, and whose bright countenances were evidences of the health giving qualities of our climate, many of whome were even more elaborodaly equipped with flowers than was the happy J. F. aforesaid. Editor Topping was an able assistant to the master of ceremonies and bore his part with becomimg dignity accompanied by his usual modesty. Refreshments which gave proof of acquirements of Waverly's ladies were served during the evening. Among those present from a distance were, Dr. O'Connor and Mr. Moore and ladies from Maple Lake; Captain Bull and wife, Attorney Sexton and Editors Roll, and Whitaker, of Cokato; Dr. Chilton, Editor Saylor, David Jackson, and Mrs. Jackson, of Howard Lake; W. G. Young and Mr. Moor, of Montrose; Mr. and Mrs. M. A. O'Hair and ye Editor of the GAZETTE, of Delano; John McHale and several others from Minneapolis. While Waverly and vicinity was well represented. The evening was pleasantly spent until 12 o'clock when those who desired repaired to the hall where dancing was the order until the morning's dawn everybody pronounced it one of the most enjoyable occasions of the season.

A Farmer Kills Himself.

Henry Koechler, a farmer residing at Greenwood, a small town about 3 miles from Rockford and about 25 miles from Minneapolis, commited suicide yesterday afternoon by drowning himself in a lake near Greenwood. Koechler is 51 years of age and has been out of his mind for some time, and hence the suicide.—Minneapolis Times.

June 1 Is The Day.

The dedication of the Minnesota buidling at the world's fair will occur June 1 and not May 13 as was reported by the St. Paul end of a morning paper this morning. The conflicting reports which have been sent out regarding the dedication of the building no doubt originated in the decission first reached by the Minnesota commession to hold the exercises during the attendance of the Minnesota editoral excursion at the fair, this date afterwards being changed at the request of Governor Nelson to June 1.

The weather is very fine. Farmers are progressing with their seeding.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 5, 1893.

President Cleveland has this week been able to devote more of his time to important public matters than in any single week since his inauguration owing to his having stopped the practice of granting personal interviews to applicants for Presidential positions; but it has been just the reverse with members of his cabinet; they have had so many callers that they have had to devote their entire attention to them, and unless there is a "let up" they will be compelled to follow the President's example and decline seeing applicants for office. Those who pretend to be shocked at what they are pleased to call the President's innovation have short memories, as he did precisely the same thing in October, 1885. It would be advantageous to applicants for places if members of the cabinet would also refuse to see applicants, for then they would have a chance to look over the papers on file and make recomendations to the President, thus hastening appointments. It is because republicans know this that they are trying so hard to create a public sentiment in favor of unlimited personal interviews; the longer the heads of the departments are kept away from the papers on file, by callers, the longer the big offices will be filled by republicans. See?

The Weather Bureau investigation has closed and Gen. Colby is now at work on the testimony, upon which his report will be based. What that report will recommend your correspondent has no means of knowing, but the evidence will certainly justify a general shake up of the bureau from top to bottom, and it is altogether probable that Secretary Morton will see that it gets it. While nothing absolutely criminal was proven against prominent officials, a state of affairs was shown to exist that calls loudly for a change.

Secretary Herbert has correct and thoroughly democratic ideas about the relations that should exist between naval officers and the U. S. Government, as his order that no more leaves of absence be granted naval officers for the purpose of allowing them to enter private employ fully proves. This practice, like many other questionable ones, is of republican origin, and has grown into almost a scandal. Under it naval officers who have acquired special knowledge along certain lines after long study, at government expense, have secured leaves of absence, in some cases for as long as four years, on two thirds pay, in order that they might sell their special knowledg to the highest bidder among those to whom it would be most valuable—the contractors who do business with the Navy department. Secretary Herbert says that hereafter when any naval officer desires to accept private employment he must resign his commission before doing so, and every good democrat will say amen!

So many complaints of one kind and another have been received by Secretary Carlisle about the methods and the administration of the New York custome house that he has determined to have it thoroughly investigated from top to bottom, and has selected the following gentlemen to do it: ex-Secretary Fairchild, of New York city Hon. Daniel Magone, of Ogdensburg, New York., and Hon. Poindexter Lunn, of Arkansas.

It is significant that upon the very day Judge Lochren, the new commissioner of Pensions, took personal charge of the Pension Bureau that frauds aggrevating something like $100,000 should have been exposed. And still more significant is the fact that all of these frauds obtained pensions through a single attorney—W. R. Drewry, of Norfolk, Virginia. That hundreds of similar cases will be unearthed is the general belief here. Judge Lochren is of the opinion that the amount paid out for persions can be largely reduced without depriving any man of what is justly and legally his and without changing the laws, and he proposes to demonstrate the correctness of that opinion.

A number of prominent democrats, headed by representative Bynum, of Indiana, are endeavoring to persuade President Cleveland to call the extra session in June, instead of September. The argument of these gentlemen is that September is the most unhealthy month in the year in Washington, malaria being worse than at any other time. They say that if Congress comes together in June the House can perfect its organization and the committees get down to work before the hottest weather of the summer comes and then a recess can be taken to the first of October, escaping the malarial season.

The constitutionality of the Geary Chinese exclusion act is now before the Supreme Court, which heard the arguments this week and will probably announce its decision inside of a week. Solicitor General Aldrich represented the government and Messrs. Joseph Choate, Maxwell. Eyarts and J. Hubley Ashton the Chinese in the arguments, which were listened to by a crowd of prominent lawyers.

"To Warm."

I observe that a great many people have been led to believe that Sup't Lewis revoked my certificate because he had found me involved in some kind of a scandal at Maple Plain or elsewhere. The plain and unvarnished truth of the matter is, as the accompanying letters will attest, my relations with the people of Maple Plain and their school were of a very pleasant nature throughout the entire year. Only three days of the term remained, and we were getting ready to wind up our year's work with a picnic on the shores of Lake Independence, when Sup't Lewis got off the train, on the 4th inst., and walked up and down the railroad track and roamed about the village, with a downcast, sullen air, like one contemplating suicide or assassination. An old gentleman who passed him on the street said he was talking to himself in a grumbling, growling tone, that indicated he was not altogether right. He finally came into the school. I greeted him cordially, as all the pupils will attest, but he would not shake hands with me. I invited him to take a seat in front, where he could obtain a good view of the school, but he went and sat behind the stove and trembled like an aspen leaf. I thought he was cold, though it was a warm day, and started to fix the fire. He blurted out that he was already too warm. at the same time pulling off his overcoat and giving me a look that might have knocked a locomotive off the track. At 3:45 I asked him to talk to the children, but he would not. The school marched out and he followed after, remarking as he passed me at the door, that he would like to see me at Mr. Hardt's at once. I went immediately to the popular Star Hotel and there found the school board and the superintendent awaiting my arrival. We were all seated in the office. Lewis began to prate about my moral character, in a rambling, incoherent way. I insisted that he be a little more specific. He then complained about my part in the Shaver fight and pronounced my newspaper correspondence relating to the Hennepin county schools immoral in tone and in the same breath notified me that he had revoked my certificate on the groud of immoral character. Then he made a dash for the door and went out like being shot out of a cannon. The members of the Maple Plain school board were all Shayer's friends and Lewis evidently expected that they would approve his action. They did not. They recognized at once that he was using his official power to gratify his personal spite at me, because I had defeated him in the Shaver fight. He found the Maple Plain school officials honorable men and not eager to join him in such a nefarious action. He went away frothing at the mouth, as it were. The whole performance was that of a madman. I was his friend, and as everybody knows, stood by him as long as I could. But he had stirred the people to mutiny and rage by re-appointing Shaver in odious violation of a pre-election agreement to give the place to Prof. J. P. Pribble. He has put himself on record as a terrible liar—a veritable Ananias. He is setting out now to give me a bad name, in the hope that I may not be able to get a school in the fall, but I can assure him he is not doing himself any good. He is now trying to dog the teachers out of the county who were not on his side in the Shayer war. It is unfortunate for the public interests to have such a man presiding over the schools, and there is serious thought of petitioning the governor to remove him. The signatures of a thousand heads of families in Hennepin county could be procured to such a petetion, in a single week, and there is no mistake about this.

WILLIAM KENNEDY

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., April 13 1892.
To Whom it may concern:

This is to certify that the bearer, Wm. Kennedy, is a teacher in good standing in this the county of Hennepin. Mr Kennedy ranks among our most progressive teachers. So far as I have been informed, his work as a teacher has proven satisfactory. His active interest in all that pertains to school work, his regnlar attendance upon our county association, and his general character as a man lead me to believe that any school that may be commited to his charge, he will give to it his best energies and a constant interest in its welfare. I commend him to any school board seeking such services as he is competet to render.

Very Respectfully,
JAMES A. LEWIS.

MAPLE PLAIN, MINN, May 4th, 1893.
To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that the bearer Mr. Wm Kennedy, has been employed for the past eight months as a teacher of our village school and that he has given general satisfaction.

He has been a member of my family, as a boarder, for the past nine months and I take pleasure in saying that I have found him to be an upright, honorable young man in every particular. He was not found wanting in education and no complaint was ever entered against him to the Maple Plain school board by any patron of the school, and as far as I know he is held in high esteem by all our people.

JULIUS HARDT,
Clerk of School Dist. 61.

MAPLE PLAIN, Minn. May 6, '93.
To Whom It May Concern

The bearer, Mr. Wm Kennedy, came to us a stranger a year ago, and we employed him to teach our village school, with a proviso in the contract that said contract should become null and void if at any time two members of the board were dissatisfied with his work, and it affords me very great pleasure to be able to say that we have never had occasion to avail ourselves of that provision of the contract.

Mr. Kennedy's work was so entirely satisfactory to the general public, that when the schoolhouse burned at the close of a four months fall term he was permited to continue his school for the balance of the year in the Presbyterian church. He is a good disciplinarian and an industrious teacher.

JOHN H. BEER,
Treasurer.

Jules Verne, who is about to bring out his seventy-fourth novel, is said to be a native of Warsaw, and the name by which he is known is the French equivalent for "beech," the initial syllable of his family patronymic. His real name is said to be Olchewitz.

Probably the largest tombstone in the world is that of the late Henry Scarlett, of Upson county, Ga. Several years before his death he selected a monster bowlder—a miniature mountain of granite, 100x250 feet in dimensions—and when he died this huge tombstone was placed over his grave.

It will scarcely be believed that wheat is sold in the United Kingdom under nearly two hundred different systems of weight. There is almost as much diversity in regard to barley and oats. The result is that quotations from the various markets create bewilderment and confusion even in the minds of experts.

George Sheffield, the "Massachusetts Yankee," as he calls himself, who has a new motor that will take a steamer to London from this side in three days without a pound of fuel, is gently but firmly informed that one John M. Keeley has had one of 'em for the last twenty years, its only drawback being that it will not mote.

One of the lost arts has been recovered in the nature of a cosmetic which was used by the Egyptian princesses and ladies of rank nearly 4,000 years ago. It brightens the eyes, imparting to the iris a verdant sheen. The stuff was found on the face of a princess mummy and analyzed. After all, that royal lady neither lived nor died in vain.

There used to be a curious oil well in Venango county, Pa., which never yielded a drop of oil except on Sunday. But there is a well in Wheeler canyon, Cal., known as the Lunatic oil spring, which is quite as curious. When the new moon appears it begins to flow oil, and the flow increases in volume as the moon grows. When the moon is full the spring yields three barrels a day. When the moon reaches its last quarter the flow ceases.

A Covington girl has won a prize for this essay on the kind of a man to marry: "If I wished to marry—which, of course, I do not—I would desire a man too noble to commit a mean act, but generous enough to forgive one. A man as gentle as a woman, as manly as a man: one who does not talk scandal or tell disagreeable truths. A man whose name I would be proud to bear, to whom I would carry my doubts and perplexities, and with whom I would find sympathy and joy."

The wear and tear of the elements on Niagara may be better remarked in early spring than at any other season. Great bowlders are continually falling from the faces of the cliffs where they were loosened by the action of the frost, and the same process no doubt is going on in the stone under the cataracts. The erosive power of the waterfall is not so great, but water, wind and frost together make the recession of the gorge, particularly on the Horseshoe side, quite perceptible.

If the Pacific ocean could be laid bare we should have a most singular spectacle. There would be a number of mountains, with truncated tops, scattered over it and these mountains would have an appearance just the very reverse of that presented by the mountains we see on shore. You know that the mountains on the shore are covered with vegetation at their bases, while their tops are barren or covered with snow; but these mountains would be perfectly bare at their bases and all round their tops they would be covered with beautiful vegetation of coral polypi.

Hereafter the flag of the United States will float from sunrise to sunset every day in the year at Navesink light from a staff one hundred and twenty-five feet high. In fact as well as fancy the American who has been on a European tour will see the flag of his country as he approaches the harbor of New York and it will be one of the first sights to gladden his eyes. The idea is a patriotic one and conducive to patriotism as well. Every day until the republic shall cease to exist is the flag to float at Navesink and may the day never come when other colors shall be run up in its place.

Everywhere in her travels the princess of Wales excites the admiration of the people on account of her youthfulness in figure and face. Not infrequently the slender woman in the simple black skirt just clearing the ground, the jaunty coat and blouse and sailor hat is mistaken for her own daughter. "A grandmother!" exclaims the Romans, "not possible." She is a source of wonder to the Italians. The idea that the famous empress queen, with hundreds of horses at her service, prefers driving about in a simple little carriage drawn by a white donkey seems incredible.

LYNCHED.

Seymour, Ind., May 15.—About 1 o'clock Saturday afternoon Conductor Louis F. Price, of Seymour, who had just left Mitchell in charge of the eastbound local Ohio & Mississippi freight train, was shot twice and killed by a young Lawrence county ruffian, John Turley. Conductor Price was collecting fares, and when he approached Turley the latter refused to give a ticket or pay his fare to his destination. The conductor insisted and Turley shot him dead. Mr. Price was about 28 years old and had been employed on the Ohio & Mississippi road for many years. Turley was arrested and placed in jail at Bedford.

Sunday night at 9 o'clock about 200 men heavily armed and masked surrounded an engine that was ready to start for Westport on the Evansville & Richmond road. Two of the men with drawn revolvers jumped in the gangway of the engine, and pointing their revolvers into the faces of the engineer and fireman forced them to dismount. The engine was backed into a side track and three flats were attached. The crowd had an engineer and fireman and in a few minutes the cars were loaded with men and the train pulled out for Bedford, determined to lynch Turley.

Bedford, Ind., May 15., 3. a.m.—At 2:10 o'clock a. m. a mob of 100 men appeared before the jail here, forced the sheriff to give up the keys and took John Turley, who murdered Conductor L. F. Price at Seymour, from his cell and hanged him in the jail yard.

Turley begged for his life, but his appeals were met with silence. The lynching was conducted in the most orderly manner, Turley's cries being the only sound heard. After lynching their man the mob requested that the body be not taken down until daylight, after which it dispersed.

The mob hanged Turley to a tree in the jail yard within 12 feet of the railroad track so that all passing trains can see his body. He was dressed as though he had been expecting them. They completed the job at 2:50 o'clock.

There were forty three men at the jail masked and about fifty or sixty standing guard at different points over the city.

FLOODS MANY PARISHES.

Vicksburgh, Miss., May 15.—Rumors of a second crevasse in Arkansas occurring at Brooks' mill, the scene of a great crevasse last year, are confirmed. The break is in a new and large levee. It was 50 feet wide this morning and cannot be closed. This, with the waters of Lakeport crevasse, will carry destruction into the Texas basin, an immense alluvial region drained by Bayou Macon and by the Boeuf and Tensas rivers, besides other parallel streams. The destruction of crops in eight or nine parishes will be enormous. At least 100,000 bales of cotton will be cut off from the year's crop. This district made no crop last year, owing to a similar disaster. There is little hope that the water will pass off in time to replant this season. The water will also do much damage in its immediate vicinity both in Louisiana and Arkansas. There were many who thought the first crevasse would not seriously affect the Tensas basin, but this river cannot possibly carry off this additional flood. Levees elsewhere remain intact, with every possibility of continuing so. The lower Arkansas front is confessedly weak.

DASHED TO DEATH.

Ten Men Dropped 3,000 Feet—Breaking of the Cage at the Top of the Main Shaft of the Calumet and Hecla Mine—Names of the Unfortunate Victims.

Calumet, Mich., May 14.—Ten timber men fell 3,000 feet to their death at noon Sunday down the Red Jacket shaft of the Calumet and Hecla mine. Their names are: Allen Cameron, James Cocking, Andrew Edno, John Hicks, Michael Leavitto, Joseph Pope, John Rodgers, Con Sullivan, James Trevni and Robert Wuopia.

The shaft is vertical and the men were aboard a skip used in hoisting rock. When the load of human freight reached the surface the engineer did not stop in time, but went to the top of the derrick. The coupling broke loose and the cage with its doomed burden went back with a crash to the bottom of the shaft. There is no way of reaching the bottom nor of getting the dead men out except by going through another shaft half a mile away. It is necessary to hoist them 550 feet by ropes to reach the level of the next shaft, then carry them nearly a mile through the drifts, and then hoist them by the man car.

Chicago, May 15.—The first big robbery that has occurred at the world's fair grounds was reported to the police at the Central station. The victim was N. B. Martans, 70 years of age, who came from Woodland, Cal. He was robbed of $4,100, which was taken from him by a pickpocket as he was crossing the bridge from the Electricity to the Manufactures building. Mr. Martans had a farm in California, but his wife and child being dead he sold his property and concluded to take a trip to Coblentz, Germany, where he was born. With the $4,100 obtained from the sale of all he had in the world, he started. No clew to the theft has been discovered.

Drowned in Russia.

St. Petersburg, May 15.—A small ferryboat on the River Msta, near Borovitchee, government of Novgorod, became unmanageable in midstream Sunday and was swept from its course. The passengers were panic-stricken. The surging of the crowd made the boat list and several passengers jumped overboard. Others launched a boat, which was at once overcrowded and swamped. Dozens of persons are known to have been drowned and many more are missing. About a fifth of the passengers made no effort to leave the boat and were saved.

Heavy Rains in Texas.

San Antonio, Tex., May 15.—The rainfall in Starr, Zapata, Hidalgo and other counties on the lower Rio Grande border has been greater during the last four days than ever before. The dry beds of creeks are filled and overflowing their banks. The rains have caused the price of cattle in all of southwest Texas to advance 25 per cent.

Farmer Hesper Shoots Himself.

Keokuk, Ia., May 13.—C. M. Hesper, a wealthy farmer living 3 miles from the city, committed suicide by shooting himself through the neck. Death was instantaneous. No reason is given.

BREASTED THE STORM.

The Plankinton Bank at Milwaukee Experiences a Heavy Run, But Emerges Unscathed—A Special Train Bearing Funds for Its Assistance Sent from Chicago.

Milwaukee, May 15.—For the first time in many years Milwaukee has experienced a run on one of its banks. Before the doors of the Plankinton bank opened a crowd of 300 people gathered about the entrance and, from the moment the bank opened until it closed in the afternoon the tellers were kept busy paying out money. Saving depositors were refused their money under the rule requiring thirty days' notice before withdrawal of funds. At noon the run was virtually over and confidence began to resume sway once more. The distrust of the Plankinton bank is due to the large amount in which it is involved in the Lappen failure.

The most conspicuous incident in connection with the run was the arrival of about $100,000 in an express safe from Chicago. The money was unloaded at the bank about 11:30 o'clock from an American Express wagon, and the sight of the big cash box had a reassuring effect on some of the anxious depositors. The cash came from the Continental national bank of Chicago, where the Plankinton had a cash balance of $77,000, and from several other Chicago banks having small balances due the Plankinton.

The special train on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad which brought the money was composed of a locomotive and an express car. It made the run in exactly two hours and fifteen minutes and just four minutes after the train dashed into the depot the money was at the door of the bank. Assistant Cashier Moody, who went to Chicago to secure the funds, was so wrought up by the importance of his duty that when the money in his charge was safely in the bank he fell in a faint.

From a statement made by the cashier to the directors Friday night the bank had in its vaults Saturday morning money belonging to it and other banks to the amount of $600,000. One hundred thousand dollars was received during the day from Chicago and at a meeting of the clearing house Saturday afternoon it was decided to take $200,000 of the bank's paper guaranteed by the directors. This gives the bank $900,000 that is in its vaults. During the day less than $70,000 was paid out to depositors and it was stated by the bank officials that this had been met by new deposits received during the day.

The scene in the bank was very interesting. Depositors were crowded against the counters, all endeavoring to get in first, and prominent men in banking and business circles were delivering short speeches assuring them of the safety of the bank and their money. Among those who spoke to the crowd were Gov. Peck, Frank Bigelow, cashier of the First national bank, and Frederick T. Day, president of the Plankinton bank.

Duluth, Minn., May 15. — Gill & Wright, proprietors of the Duluth roller mills, have assigned to F. W. Paine, cashier of the Security bank. The failure may be attributed to the recent deal in May wheat at Chicago. The firm had spread out considerably and was in no condition to stand the squeeze. The assets are variously estimated, according to the valuation placed upon the mill property, from $75,000 to $120,000. Liabilities, $67,000.

Chicago, May 15.—President Zimri Dwiggins of the collapsed Columbia bank views without any great concern the reports from Washington that he may be indicted by the treasury department for peculiar methods of financiering. The report was to the effect that "irregularities" were discovered in the bank's method of doing business, and that these "irregularities" constituted ample grounds for an indictment against the president. The amount of money involved in these transactions is said to be as much as $400,000 or $500,000.

Indianapolis, Ind., May 10.—The panicky feeling caused by the suspension of so many banks throughout the state is passing away. It is possible that there are a few more of the country banks that may have to close their doors, but the feeling is that the worst is over. The many suspensions have not caused more than a ripple of excitement among the old line bankers. Money has tightened up a little, but the best financiers say there is no ground whatever for the indiscriminate talk of the danger of a panic. Indianapolis bankers express the belief that the suspension of this Dwiggins and Paris line of banks will result in good. The state authorities, they say, ought never to have permitted such banks to do business, and the belief is that in the future such banks will be watched with more care.

There have been in all ten failures of banks in the state as a result of the failure of the Columbia national of Chicago. First reports of sixteen failures were unfounded. It is announced by John W. Paris and J. Shannon Nane, of this city, that the four banks in which they are interested will reopen within a few days. The Orleans bank has been disposed of to Orleans capitalists and will, it is announced, resume business to-day. The syndicate announces that it has completed arrangements for the reopening of the other banks in its extensive string. It is also stated that some of the banks operated by Dwiggins and Starbuck of the Columbia national will be reopened during the week.

For the Next Campaign.

Chicago, May 15. — The national executive committee of the prohibition party held a meeting at the Sherman house Saturday. The party intends to begin work for the next presidential campaign at once, and this meeting was called for the purpose of devising and perfecting a plan of state work which, when completed, will be submitted to the state central committee for its approval. The plan will include, besides the usual lectures and political speeches, a series of great Sunday Gospel temperance meetings in all the large cities.

Guilty of Smuggling Potatoes.

Portland, Me., May 15.—Samuel J. Watson has been found guilty of smuggling potatoes from New Brunswick into the New England states. Just before his arrest he had completed a building directly on the border line between Maine and New Brunswick, and within a week he had placed $5,000 worth of stock there.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

A Bad Young Man.

Frank Kellogg, a young man who is well and hitherto favorably known in the best circles of society in Red Wing, was arrested in St. Paul recently by Chief of Police Battan, of Red Wing. It is charged against him that, after his return from an eastern college, about three years ago, he became betrothed to a respected young lady of Red Wing, and on the Saturday preceding the date which was fixed for their wedding, she entrusted to him her family diamonds and a gold watch and chain, which her parents had given her. He was to take them to some responsible jeweler in St. Paul and bring them back to her, but he never returned, and the past two years the police have been searching for him.

Turns Out Bad.

Joseph Gochey, who was successful in spirting away Miss Annie Schneider, at Winona, from the outstretched hands of two formidable rivals, and marrying her at Fountain City, has now deserted her. His present wife had been informed that Mr. Gochey had been married, but at that time he assured Miss Schneller that he was divorced. Since he has told her differently, and as an excuse for avoiding a bigamy suit has told his wife that he must leave to procure a divorce from his first wife. Miss Schneller is heartbroken and knows nothing of the whereabouts of Gochey.

Defended His Father.

St. Stephens, near St. Cloud, is a small settlement around the Catholic church. The people are mostly Polanders. There is a bitter feud between the families of Schaubeck and Schebat, and recently young Schaubeck entered Schebat's store, preparing to pound the old man, when young Frank Schebat from behind opened fire with a revolver. The first ball took the lobe off an ear, the second went through the shoulder and the third lodged near the neck. The wounded man was brought to St. Cloud and cared for. The next day he was around taking friendly beer with acquaintances.

To Meet An Old Friend.

Frank P. Norris, convicted of forgery, went to Stillwater to begin the service of his 18 month's sentence for the crime. An interesting feature of the case is the fact that several years have elapsed since C. H. Adamson was convicted of the same offense, and sent to serve a term at Stillwater, his conviction being secured mainly upon the evidence of this same Norris, with whom he had been associated in several pieces of business.

Objects to Black Stepfather.

Billie Butler, of Anoka, colored, came to St. Cloud with a white wife. He got a hack and drove to the house where a stepdaughter is employed as housemaid. He walked in, picked up the girl in his arms, drove away with her and took her home. The girl is nearly 18, and left home because her mother, who is divorced from her father, has twice since married negroes, and she found life unbearable in such a home.

Pierce, Minneapolis; W. H. Scruby, St. Cloud; William M. Standish, Mankato, and J. J. Finley, Duluth. C. H. Pierce was elected president, W. M. Standish, secretary, and B. W. Kirby treasurer.

Drowned.

Henry Schelgreen's 4-year-old son is supposed to have been drowned in Sauk Rapids. The father and elder brother were fishing from the bank. The boy started from the brother to the father and this was the last seen of him. No one saw him fall into the water or heard a scream, but the boy cannot be found, nor has his body been discovered.

In the Spring

Many people are troubled with dizziness, dullness, unpleasant taste in the morning, and that "tired feeling." Pimples, boils and other manifestations of impure blood also appear, annoying and depressing.

To all such sufferers we earnestly urge a trial of Hood's Sarsaparilla. No preparation ever received such unanimous praise for its success as a Spring Medicine. It cures scrofula, salt rheum and every other evidence of impure blood. It overcomes that "tired feeling" and all other debility.

Mr. Geo. W. Twist
Coloma, Wis.

"A few years ago my health failed me, and I consulted several physicians. Not one could clearly diagnose my case and their medicine failed to give relief. After much persuasion I commenced to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. Have taken several bottles and am much improved. From an all run down condition I have been restored to good health. Formerly I weighed 135 pounds, now I balance the scales at 176 pounds. Hood's Sarsaparilla has been a great benefit to me, and I have recommended it to friends, who realize good results by its use." "German Syrup"

I am a farmer at Edom, Texas. I have used German Syrup for six years successfully for Sore Throat, Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Pains in Chest and Lungs and Spitting-up of Blood. I have tried many kinds of Cough Syrups in my time, but let me say to anyone wanting such a medicine—German Syrup is the best. We are subject to so many sudden changes from cold to hot, damp weather here, but in families where German Syrup is used there is little trouble from colds. John F. Jones.

S.S.S. CURES MALARIAL POISON

Nature should be assisted to throw off impurities of the blood. Nothing does it so well, so safely or so promptly as Swift's Specific.

LIFE HAD NO CHARMS.

For three years I was troubled with malarial poison, which caused my appetite to fail, and I was greatly reduced in flesh, and life lost all its charms. I tried mercurial and potash remedies, but to no effect. I could get no relief. I then tried S.S.S. A few bottles of this wonderful medicine made a complete and permanent cure, and I now enjoy better health than ever. J. A. RICE, Ottawa, Kas.

MEMORY'S FACE.

They had not met for forty years,
And they looked each other o'er
To find one trace of the merry face
That the childhood playmate wore;
The golden hair was streaked with gray,
The laughing lip firm set,
The eye was dull, the form grown full;
"How changed," they said, "and yet—"

They had not met for forty years,
And they looked each other o'er,
There was scarcely a trace of the merry face
That the childhood playmate wore:
The cheek was brown and thin and old
That used to be so sweet,
And they did not know in the step so slow
The tread of the boyish feet.

"We have not met for forty years,"
They said: "Is it you and I,
If we cannot trace in the olden face
A bit of the long agone?"
And the answer came: "You remember the time
When the stovepipe tumbled down,
When we played hi'spy, when you and I
Rolled hoop through the midst of the town:

"You remember the orchard with 'summer sweets'
And the hatfuls we used to shake.
You remember—" "Oh, yes, it is you, old Cæs,
It is you, and there's no mistake."
"Ah! the lip, and the cheek and the eye may change,
And the hair grow white and thin,
But the forty years cannot make us strange,
We are ourselves within."

"Yes, the eye of the soul can keep its light
And the voice of the heart can sing
The same old song as sweet and strong
As in youth." Then let us bring
Our store from life childish, changeless past
Till memory's face shall flame
With the ruddy glow of the long ago,
For our souls are just the same.

Across The Bridge.

By Henry Howard Heath.

[Copyright, 1893, by the Author.]

Old man, with thin wisps of wintry hair floating down over his ragged coat collar, and hands that were almost transparent, so thin were they, walked slowly into the room where Justice Bloxam held his court. With bowed head and wistful air the old man tiptoed silently to the rear of the room and sat down in an office chair which had lost its bottom and become incoherent about the joints.

In addition to the lawyers, litigants and loungers who usually frequented the courtroom, there were many strange faces—morbid seekers after the sensational—to be seen on that morning, for a murder case was to be brought up for a preliminary hearing. Chubby-faced young attorneys bustled to and fro through the throng, bent on keeping up appearances and making themselves conspicuous. At intervals reporters would glide into the rear office behind the judge's seat and make whispered inquiries of the haughty clerk, who lost no opportunity of asserting his American independence by snubbing those who came to him with civil questions.

A case in which a shrewd bankrupt was pitting himself against two no less shrewd lawyers was before the court, and the audience, which cared not a pleayune which should outwit the other, occupied itself with whispered conversation.

The old man looked dreamily out through the window. His eyes were lifted above the tin roofs of the adjacent buildings that were glittering under the morning sun. He looked beyond the dizzy height of the chamber of commerce out into the broad expanse where fleecy bits of cloud were drifting and rifting into soft couches and snow-like columns. The old man's eyes were dim with the radiance of the morning and the memories of other mornings.

"I beg your pardon, sir?" A sandy-haired youth with a match in his mouth was speaking to the dreamer.

"Putty hor'ble case that, the killin' o' that doctor's wife. Out 'n Evanston, warn't it, mister?"

"I don't know, sir," was the meek reply. Sandyhair let the front legs of his chair come to the floor, unclasped his hands from around his knees and gazed at his neighbor with astonishment and disgust. Then with a muttered "pshaw" he spat out the match and stuck an unlighted cigarette in the corner of his mouth.

At that moment a stir ran through the audience, and those who had not an unobstructed view craned their necks forward that they might see the murderer. The old man clenched his hands tightly and held his breath as the prisoner was brought through the door guarded by two officers. His hands were cuffed together, but before he took his place in front of the bench the cuffs were unlocked. With a grin of indifference for the horror on the faces before him and conceit at the attention he excited the burly young ruffian extracted half a plug of tobacco from his pocket and bit off a piece as large as a walnut. Then he began to chew, rolling his quid about and spitting at a cooperative cuspidor. His eyes were small and bird like. They were set deep in a low, fleshy forehead. His head was square and closely clipped. From the top of the head to the base of his thick neck was a straight line.

The charge against him was a double one: house breaking and murder. He had broken into the house of a Dr. Kingley, in Evanston. After rifling the china closet of what solid ware he could find, he made his way to the doctor's bedroom, with the intention of taking his watch and money. Mrs. Kingley, a very light sleeper, was awakened by some noise, and, seeing a strange figure in the room, screamed. That scream was her death warrant, for the robber drove his knife deep into her bosom. Before the assassin had time to leap through a window Dr. Kingley, who had been roused by his wife's cry, grappled with him. The physician was a member of an athletic club and had won prizes more than once for wrestling, throwing the hammer and other Samsonian feats. He easily kept the murderer captive until the police arrived. As it happened a patrolman was passing the Kingley residence just as Mrs. Kingley screamed. Blowing his whistle shrilly the officer leaped the fence and, running to a rear door, burst it open and entered. A few moments later two other policemen ran up to the corner just after the first man and Dr. Kingley came out with their prisoner.

As the young ruffian heard the officers tell their story and listened to the bereaved husband's tones full of sorrow and suppressed fury he grinned broadly. When asked if he had anything to say for himself he grinned. That was his only answer. Justice Bloxam committed him to answer in the county court. No bail, of course, was allowed. As the officers were about to lead their prisoner away a deep groan was heard from the rear of the room. All those present looked around, and the murderer's eyes dispassionately turned toward the sound. What he saw was a white-faced old man supported in the arms of a sandy-haired youth on one side and a fat young lawyer on the other. Their burden had fainted, and the rigid face, so thin and sad, looked as if the angel of death had swept it with his wing. One moment the assassin gazed, and in that moment the thin blue eyelids were raised. Father and son looked in each other's eyes. The slender, wasted arms of the old man were held out beseechingly and the trembling lips formed two words: "My boy!" An instant the prisoner's thick lips seemed to twitch and his eyes to glisten; then, turning to his guards with a scowl, he said:

"What'r youse fellers stannin' there for? Come on 'r I'll leave yer."

All of those who had thronged the courtroom were gone with the exception of the old man. He sat in the bottomless chair with his hands clasped and his eyes turned toward the floor. Painted there on the boards before him was a picture—a child's laughing face with a mass of brown hair floating about it, and blue eyes that seemed to look the love that the rosy lips fain would speak. Long the old man gazed with the picture shimmering and dancing before his eyes. Now and again it looked as if the wanton hair was blown by a gust of wind across the smiling face. Merry eyes gleamed through the rifts at him who sat and dreamed. At last a man came to sweep out the place. He touched the old man gently and said in no unkind tone:

"You'll have to go out now, mister. You'll have to go home. Court is closed."

The old man meekly rose, and as he walked toward the door the vision floated on before. Down the narrow stairway he crept and out upon the pavement. People passing jostled him, but he heeded them not, for above their heads the laughing eyes, the saucy lips and brown head floated like a phantom of the past. Caught up by the sweep of the crowd he was carried along north with it, but before him went the vision as though it were a guiding star. Pushed and buffeted here and there, he took no heed of his direction, only looking to the vision to lead him where it would. When the Clark street bridge was reached he failed to realize it, and walked slowly on with his hands clasped and the merry face still going on before. A bell rang. He heard it not, for the child's lips were parted with a smile. By and by—not long, but how long he knew not—he came to the end of the bridge. As he looked down, down into the muddy, opaque stream, the vision danced on the waving ripples and the blue eyes seemed to say: "Come." The old man stretched out his arms, and it seemed as if the vision—his boy, his darling baby, the treasure of his heart—floated nearer, and it seemed as if the rosy lips were pursing themselves for a kiss. Nearer and nearer came the bonny face, and the old man's arms were trembling with eagerness to embrace the loved one. At last the thin, wrinkled lips touch the soft, tender ones and—splash!

A few blocks north of the river stands a square, gloomy building, with iron-barred windows. In a dark and dingy cell below the street level a burly young man lay on an iron bed. He was fast asleep and snoring lustily. It was the old man's son.

Modern Battle-Ships.

From the beginning of naval warfare battle-ships have been the principal defence of all maritime people. Their development has enlisted the highest talent. The keenest intelligence, and in each period types have been produced which have justly evoked the praise and wonder of the sea-going races. But great as was the development of the past, never before, perhaps, has equal progress been attained in the same space of time as in the last quarter of a century. At the beginning of the civil war iron ship construction was in its infancy, and the stately triple-tiered steam line of battle-ships were supposed to be almost invincible; but between them and the mighty ocean fortresses of to-day the contrast is greater than between the war galleys of the Greeks and the vessels that fought with Nelson at the Nile.—Harper's Young People.

He Wanted Particulars.

"Sleep?" responded the large, good-natured comfortable-looking man, to a question the man by the stove had put to him. "Sleep? I sleep all night like a baby."

"What baby?" queried a nervous, harassed-looking young fellow, with a strange glitter in his eyes. "What baby, I say?" he repeated in harsh and hollow tones that frightened the company, for they did not know that he had been a father for only a year.—Detroit Free Press.

A Hard Woman to Please.

"There is no pleasing Mrs. Adipose," said Parker. "She got in a crowded car the other day, and when three men got up to offer her a seat she got mad. Took it as a reflection upon her size."—Harper's Magazine.

—"How did you come to hit the plaintiff?" said Judge Appell to the prisoner. "Come to hit 'im, is it? Why, man dear, your honor, I wasn't two fut from him, and I couldn't have missed hittin' him if I had been cross-eyed."—Mount Vernon News.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Omelet: Put six eggs in a bowl, and give twelve beats with a fork. Put a teaspoonful of butter in an omelet-pan, and set on the fire to melt; pour the eggs in, and shake over a quick fire until set; sprinkle with salt and pepper; roll, and turn out on a heated dish.—Harper's Bazar.

—Ham Croquettes: Take two cups of fine-minced ham, or, better, one cup of ham and one of veal, mix well with one-quarter cup of bread crumbs. Add two tablespoonfuls of stock or gravy, and season with one teaspoonful of salt, one-quarter teaspoonful of pepper. Add the yolks of two eggs, make into small balls, cover it with egg and bread crumbs, and fry.—Boston Budget.

—Dried Apricot Pudding: Wash carefully one-half pound of dried apricots and one-half pound of hominy, put them together in a bowl, add one quart of water and let soak over night. In the morning place in a double boiler, with one-half cupful of sugar and a teaspoonful of salt; cook four hours. Turn into a buttered dish, sprinkle with sugar and brown in the oven. Serve with sugar, cream or sauce.—N. Y. Observer.

—Eggs for Luncheon: Boil eight eggs for fifteen minutes; remove the shells, take out the yolks, and cut up the whites. Put a tablespoonful of butter in a frying-pan, and set on the stove to melt; sift in a tablespoonful of flour, mix smooth, and thin with half a teacup of cream, and stir until ready to boil; add the chopped whites of the eggs with half a dozen chopped oysters, season with salt and pepper, and stir until well heated; add the yolks let cook four minutes longer, and serve very hot.—Harper's Bazar.

—Whole Cod: Put a large quantity of water into the fish kettle, which must be of a proper size for the cod, with one-quarter of a pint of vinegar, a handful of salt and one-half of a stick of horseradish. Let these boil together for some time and then put in the fish. When it is done enough (which will be known by feeling the fins and the look of the fish) lay it to drain, put it on a hot fish plate, or strainer, and then in a warm dish, with the liver cut in half and laid on each side. Serve with shrimp or oyster sauce and garnish with horseradish.—Good Housekeeping.

—Scotch Cakes: These will keep for weeks—locked. Beat to a cream one and three-fourths of a cup of butter, two cups of sugar, two well beaten eggs, a wineglass of sweet milk, a pinch of salt, and the juice of half a small lemon. Sift half a teaspoonful of baking powder with enough flour to make a stiff batter, stir well, and then knead, or mix a little stiffer so that you can mold it. Take a bit of the dough the size of an egg, pat it to an oblong shape half an inch thick pinch the edges lightly with the fingers to a sort of scollop, press lightly some candied caraway comfits on top, and put in a greased pan; bake ten or twelve minutes in a moderate oven. Watch the baking so that they bake only to a delicate brown.—American Agriculturist.

—To Make Good Bread: Take four quarts of good flour, mix with it half a tablespoon of salt, and set it in a warm place. Put one cupful of flour and one yeast cake crumbled fine in a bowl. Mix to a smooth batter with one cupful of lukewarm water. Set in a warm place and let it rise about three-quarters of an hour. Have one and one-half pints of sweet milk, and one and one-half pints of water, made moderately warm. Empty the bowl of sponge into the flour, and add the milk and water, until a firm, rather stiff, dough is obtained. Knead this vigorously for five minutes, then set in a warm place, and let it rise from two and a half to three hours. Divide into three loaves, mold and place in loaf pans. Let these rise for about an hour longer, and then bake in a hot oven from three-quarters to one hour.—Ladies' World.

As to Your Eyes.

It is said that the health of the brunette type of eye is, as a rule, superior to that of the blonde type. Black eyes usually indicate good powers of physical endurance. Dark-blue eyes are most common in persons of delicate, refined, or effeminate natures, and generally show weak health. Light-blue, and much more, gray eyes indicate hardy and active constitutions. With regard to diseases of the eye, brown or dark colored are weaker or more susceptible to injury from various causes than gray or blue eyes. Light-blue eyes are generally the most powerful, and next to those are gray. The lighter the pupil the greater and longer continued is the degree of tension the eye can sustain.—Chicago Mail.

Pretty Fancies.

Not only economical but picturesque are the new fashionable bodices quite different from the skirt, which enables one to use the "short-length" patterns which are found on the bargain counters. Among the novelties is a card case provided with an especial pocket for bonbons. Bands of narrow velvet with rosette bows, trim the skirts of semi-dress and evening costumes. Black bengaline, Ottoman faille and other shining, lusterless, corded silks are greatly used for church, reception and visiting dresses. Velvet sleeves, full, though not high, are worn with gowns of all sorts, even those of transparent materials.—Chicago Times.

Your Neighbor's Motes.

Learn to seal your lips forever on the wretched, miserable habit of telling the world about the motes in your neighbor's eye. Who made you a judge over him? Go, if you will, and personally tell him his faults between you and him alone. Tell him with love and sympathy in your heart because you want to help him to become nobler and better, because you can not bear to see a stain on him, and not because you would humble him or glory over him, and in the end he will bless you for it, and you will have done a good work. But never tell the world of his faults.—Detroit Free Press.

A Letter Case.

Cut two pieces of pasteboard in the shape of a shamrock and large enough to conceal an envelope of ordinary size. Cover each with plush, of any color you may fancy, and line them with silk of the same or a contrasting color. Unite the two pieces at their lower edges and finish with a silk cord, or use "odds and ends." At the top put a large bow of ribbon, and suspend the case near the writing-desk. The ribbon and cord should harmonize in color with the plush.—St. Louis Republic.

ABOUT GOOD MANNERS.

Hints for Young Women Regarding Their Actions in Public.

Many women, particularly the more youthful ones, commit through carelessness or thoughtlessness many breaches of good manners which need but a reminder to be speedily remedied. To begin with, the sweet tooth of the average American girl tempts her to eat candy in the street and at the theaters, though she may be quite aware that to do so is not good form. The same girl who would scorn to eat peanuts and condemns those delicacies as "vulgar" munches away on caramels or buttercups in public vehicles, public thoroughfares and public places of amusement.

Many young women, the best-hearted in the world, will wound their parents' hearts by openly correcting or contradicting them, forgetting that their own superior knowledge does not show up to advantage when paraded at the expense of good manners. This habit on the part of the younger members of society is one that should be nipped in the bud at once. Suppose father or mother do mispronounce a word, make a misstatement, or fall into an error of grammar, does it make things any better by emphasizing their faults so openly? The first law of good manners is consideration and respect for those older than ourselves, therefore that, outside of any other promptings, should restrain the flippant carrection of parents before strangers at least.

To discuss your clothes, your servants or your domestic affairs is to stamp yourself ill-bred. General conversation is the only sort tolerated in the best circles. Do not talk and laugh at the theater or other places of amusement, annoying those about you who came to enjoy the performance and not your conversation. Do not stare at people and then discuss them so that there is no possibility of their mistaking the topic of your conversation; in fact, let consideration for others be your watchword and refinement your code, and your manners will improve steadily under such personal discipline.—Philadelphia Times.

A LIVELY RAZOR-BACK.

The Texas Hog Whose Perversity is Provocation of Ornate Profanity.

"No, I have not been toying with a buzz-saw nor shaking hands with a cyclone," said a traveler, as he limped to a seat. "I have been having a little matinee with a razor-back hog. I've bought a home at Dallas, Tex., and have taken great pains to fix my lawn au fait. You see, down in that country people pretty nearly live out o' doors, and the flowers that bloom only in the spring up here shed their sweetness all the year round down there. The other day I discovered that one of those long, lank, razor-back hogs that can outrun an ostrich and root a hole through a bank vault while you wait, had got in and started to tunnel down to China. I went out and made a few impromptu remarks to him, but he didn't mind—kept right on with the artesian well. Then I broke a four-dollar garden rake across his spinal vertebræ, and the circus commenced. I would get him within three feet of the open gate when he would turn, run over me and begin a new excavation before I could get my feet out of the air. I then called a policeman, but he ran between the copper's legs, threw him a double somersault and broke his collar-bone. The miserable tool of an effete administration is now suing me for damages. I was just about to turn in an alarm and ask the department to put the porker out, when an old negro stuck his head over the fence and offered to remove him for two bits. I closed with him at once, sat down, nursed myself and watched proceedings. He went up to the hog and remarked: 'You stay right w'ar you is. D'ye hyar! Don't ebber lemme catch you out o' dis yer lot.' The hog looked at him and moved toward the gate. The negro tried to head him off, but he uttered a loud 'woof' and went down the street like Old Nick beating tanbark. Don't tell me that man has descended from the monkey! He has simply shed his bristles, that is all."—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

A PLEASANT VOICE.

Its Wonderful Influence in the Home Circle.

Perhaps our own voice is not always as pleasant as it ought to be, but we realize it the moment we hear one that is soft and low and even modulated, and instinctively we altar ours to correspond with it. Nothing so quickly checks rising anger, or quick retort, as a gentle voice. Well has the wise man said: "A soft answer turneth away wrath; but grievous words stir up anger."

Few of us can remember our mothers, now, perhaps, passed away, as having had other than pleasant voices. Harsh words were strangers to those lips. The children, when they had done wrong were corrected, out the voice that chided their misdoings was a gentle one. Let our children have like remembrances of us. Children are quick to imitate. If the mother or father speaks crossly or, in a loud, commanding tone, the child soon learns to speak so also, and among his younger companions he will assume the same tone that he has heard from older lips.

Although a pleasant voice is not given to everybody, culture can accomplish wonders in this as in everything else. Let anyone strive to acquire a pleasant voice, persevering time after time when in a moment of forgetfulness the old harsh notes escape the lips, and after a time the voice will become changed to one at least soft and well modulated, if not musical.—American Agriculturist.

When to Lie Low.

Store Boy—Oh! Oh Th' store's on fire! Fire!

Merchant—For mercy's sake, keep quiet, and bring me a bucket or you'll have the whole fire department 'round there squirting all over my stock before we can put the fire out.—Good News.

A Tip to the Unwary.

Guest—Are the people who stop here usually very liberal?

Waiter—Oh, yes, sir, they are very generous.

Guest—Ah, then, there's no necessity of my giving you anything.—Detroit Free Press.

To Be Expected.

Mr. Winks—Well, well! The coal monopolists are in a heap of trouble.

Mrs. Winks—What's the matter now?

Mr. Winks—All their workmen are striking for higher wages on account of the high price of coal.—Puck.

Housekeepers Should Remember.

The Government Chemists, after having analyzed all the principal brands of baking powder in the market, in their reports placed the "Royal" at the head of the list for strength, purity and wholesomeness; and thousands of tests all over the country have further demonstrated the fact that its qualities are, in every respect, unrivaled.

Avoid all baking powders sold with a gift or prize, or at a lower price than the Royal, as they invariably contain alum, lime or sulphuric acid, and render the food unwholesome.

PERSONAL BREVITIES.

Ex-Senator Joseph E. Brown was seventy-two years old a few days ago, and he is reported to be enjoying a "ripe and serene old age."

Benjamin Franklin died in 1790 and the validity of his will has only just been established. What a warning against leaving one's good deeds to be done by other people instead of doing them one's self.

Cardinal Gibbons has indorsed the project of buying an official residence for Mgr. Satolli in Washington. Bishop Ryan, of Buffalo, will act as treasurer of the fund to be raised for that purpose.

MASON & HAMLIN

ORGANS are without question the BEST. They have taken HIGHEST HONORS AT ALL GREAT WORLD'S EXHIBITIONS, and for forty years best musicians have declared them superior to all others.

Don't be humbugged into buying inferior organs which are flooding the country. They are put in ORGANS to showy, flashy cases, while the interior, or musical portion—the chief thing in any musical instrument—is unscientifically and poorly made. In quality of tone and durability they don't compare with Mason & Hamlin ORGANS, yet the latter are but little higher in price. That "the best is the cheapest" is true of organs and pianos if anywhere.

The Mason & Hamlin Piano, constructed on our improved method of PIANOS and patented stringing, is declared by piano experts to be "the greatest improvement in pianos of the century." Truth and Veraciy.

We should distinguish between truth and veracity. A man is veracious when he represents things as they seem to him to be; he speaks the truth when he represents them as they are. Veracity may therefore consist with prejudice, preoccupation, heedless perception, imperfect judgement. Hence the merely veracious man is not alway a safe guide. But he who speaks the truth, that is perceives and reports facts as they are, is the man of the higest quality and deserves to have many followers. Such a man will be a sort of silent prophet who observes and thinks much more than he speaks. There is great room and great need for thought in this wrold, and scarcely less for accurate observation. Our young people can do no better thing than to dig for truth as men dig for hidden treasure. This will give strength to their character and weight to their words.--Methodist Herald.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

THE TOBACCO HABIT.

(Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE.)

Much has been said of late about smoking cigarettes.
Of course it is our duty to try and stop that curse.
But is there not another quite as bad? And I'm not sure but worse.
The cigarette is confined mostly to the city chap;
And our dear country boys can smoke and chew tobacco and nothing thought of that.
It is much less poison in a plug, some smaller than your fist.
Than it is nicely done up in a little paper twist.
Legislators get up bills against the little cigarette;
And while they make our laws and thus so lordly sit.
Making amendments to this bill and that, no doubt every one
Is constantly rolling the sweet morsel under the tongue:
Or, if not, that are smoking an old tobacco pipe,
Or cigar, and feeling, of course they were doing just right.
Old men talk to the boys about the foolish tobacco habit
But great allowance should be made for them, for long the weed they'v used.
And they have the habit formed; therefore THEY must be excused.
The Bible says from your own eye first cast out the beam;
Then the mote that's in your brother,s eye will be more clearly seen.
Hoary heads, nor years of use, is no excuse at all;
For anyone, with a little bit of sense, is willing to admit
That it is an expensive, foolish, filthy, habit;
All this they very quietly and meekly own;
But just tell them that it is a sin, and they are doing wrong.
Then the breeze comes up. You'd hardly think they to the church belonged.
How can it be a sin, they say, for see how many good men use it.
Yes, they go to church, and sing and pray and sometimes can repeat the text.
But just call their idol a sin, if you want to see them vexed.
Then while with the spirit these expressive lines they sing:
"Break down every idol; cast out every foe.
Now wash me and I shall be whiter than snow."
It's fearfully plain their understanding must be very slow.
And this beautiful hymn is quite a favorite with some;
"The dearest idol I have known
Whate'er that idol be,
Help me to tear it from it's throne
And worship only thee."
Consistency thou art a jewel fair,
But, alas, apparently how few there are
That can, gracefully, this jewel wear.
Now there is no use in quibbling and trying to get around it.
It's plain to be seen what is not right must, surely, be wrong.
Just two paths are before us; if not to the right, to the other we belong.
I wonder what they would think of their pastor
If from the pulpit, down the church aisle he would slide;
And, into his pocket, his hand slyly slip, after tobacco, his idol.
I'm thinking ther'd be some sly looks, about then;
And some doubts as to his Christianity or religion.
Or, was he purely honest in all his ways and profession.
Is it any worse for the preacher than 'tis for the people?
"What's sauce for the goose is the same for the gander."
So don't be so selfish, but allow equal rights as long as it's handy.
Now these same old tobacco christians will, ofen, tell you that they, indeed, feel too poor, O dear!
And really cannot afford to give their pastor a few dollars a year.
I wish every one, old and young, was obliged to give to him,
Just what it costs them each year for the weed.
Then the gospel would spread, and our pastors would be supplied every need.
Why is it our ministers are so silent on this subject?
But we know, of course, for there's brother A, and B, and C, all use the weed.
And their feelings are very tender on this point. Yes, very, indeed!
Then there's the prohibitionists are doing a noble work,
And may God's richest blessings crown their deeds and His promises them cheer.
But why so silent about this twin brother of whisky, rum, and beer?
He's the drunkard's friend, and always in saloons.
The children's bread does he not take, if we awright the subject view.
For you'll scarcely find a man that drinks that does not smoke, or chew,
And many, many little feet must often shoeless go.
To gratify this selfish appetite for tobacco as you know.
No, the bible does not say, Thou shalt not use tobacco.
Neither does it say you can use if you want to,
But this is what it says and you can read it for yourselves and see.
No idols shalt thou worship, nor have no gods but me.
Now to test this, as the golden orb lights up the eastern sky.
And you from your peaceful slumbers rise.
Does your waking thoughts with gratitude arise.
To the omnipotent, divine, and alwise Giver,
Or, do they with idolatrots desire turn to the poison weed tobacco.
But, I presume I've said enough, so will let the subject end;
For by it I do not expect to even gain a friend.
Now, I hope you'll all excuse my crazy rhyming.
But the sentiment is there, as you can plainly see.
And in it you'll perceive far more truth than poetry.
I'm well aware the rythm doesn't always jingle.
But I sincerely hope that the ears of all tobacco slaves will JUST FAIRLY tingle.
I don't know as this will exactly suit our obliging editor, the headman of the BUFFALO GAZETTE.
For he may chew tobacco, or smoke a cigar, or little cigarette.
And he may stuff this in the waste basket, way down out of sight.
Or, possibly he'll take it to light his old tobacco pipe.

E. M. M.

THE fastest trip from New York to Queenstown, yet made, was made this month by the Cunarder Campania in 5 days, 17 hours, and 42 minutes.

THE Scientific American has an article on the Philip's Flying Machine which is claimed as the most complete structure yet built for areial navigation and which is supposed to be capable of travelling at the rate of 35 miles per hour. Want our country return to its primative state and the roads, and the railroads disappear from the face of the earth in a few years when everybody flies through the air? And what will become of the magnificent vessels now on our rivers, lakes and oceans:

SUICIDES are altogether to numerous now-a-days. What anyone wants to commit such a deed for, is beyond the comprehension of sane people. When one kills himself he leaves among his neighbors a chance to suspicion someone of murdering him. He leaves a stigma upon his family which they cannot live down for several generations. He leaves this earth with the last act the taking of a human life, his own, and for which his chances of forgiveness by a just God must necessarily be veey slight indeed. Is it not better to make our friends happy; lessen the trials of our neighbors; and make our peace with God and abide his time for callins us hence? Would not this be more pleasant for the community generally?

DEMOCRACY must be looked after if it would succeed. The time for rings, ringsters' and people who work for self is past. Democratic principles are coming to the front. People are reading and thinking for themselves, they are beginning to know that their minds are equal to the minds of their neighbor, and in many cases far superior to those of hired orators, who, just before every election make their appearance in numbers almost equal to, and quite as voracious as the wily blackbird in the spring. They are accumulating more money with which to buy books, periodicals, and newspapers, and in concequence of the improved machinery by which their work was much more quickly and easily done they find more leisure for reading, and are not only reading one side of the great political questions of the day but are studying both sides, and all sides and actually finding out for themselves to what political party they naturally belong. And are more zealous than ever before for the prosperity of the government, and willing to do what is honest and right, for the upbuilding of their faith with that end in view. They are less ready, for paltry wealth, or proffered honors, to barter away their votes to those who, according to their views, are doing an injury to our government. They are desirous of seeing men who are honest, reliable and faithful to all trusts of life, in office. They are watching their public servants, and their would be leaders. They are becoming acquainted with the intrigues and the schemes of those who would guide in the future as they have in the past, for self aggrandizement steered the ship into stormy seas, and amid the wrecks caused by the hidden rocks have saved to themselves what they could, leaving others to look out for themselves. None but men who will, with fidility discharge their duties should be given offices. The new administration is right in not doing things too precepitously. In looking into the case of each applicant. In investigating as to whether he is a proper man for the position before appointing to a place of trust and honor any would be officer.

The Millennium Pictured.

A fascinating picture of the possibilities of future development on the earth is portrayed in "The Story of the Millennium." which is made a special feature of the June number of DEMORESTS MAGAZINE. It depicts the condition of mankind on the earth in the ten thousandth century, when interplanetary communication has been established, and the "dream of the ages" has become a vivid and magnificant reality; Novel views concerning the progressive evolution of mankind during the intervening epochs are included, and the narrative is related in an easy, conversational manner, the events being supposed to transpire through the publication of the proceedings of the Optimists' Club, an institution established for the purpose of foretelling the future of the world. The story is illustrated by and is from the pen of Arthur Field. this is the first attempt at anything like a complete pictorial representation of the future appearance of the earth and its inhabitants.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON. D. C., May 19, 1893.

Men and brethren, hear ye all! This administration is going to be democratic, in fact as well as in name. The overwhelming verdict of the people is to be obeyed, and no republican is to be left in a place of responsibility. The pace to this goal has not been precipitate, but it has been and will be steady and shure until it is reached. Secretary Gresham took the lead, and there isn't more than one or two republicans left in important positions in the State Department. Secretary Carlisle is a good second, and it will not be long before all of the chiefs of divisions of the Treasury Department will be democrats. Secretary Smith has begun to call for the resignations of the republican chiefs of divisions in the Interior Department and he proposes to keep it up until they are all out. Secretary Morton has not been behind in proportion to the size of his department. Postmaster General Bissell has had to devote so much time to the selection of postmasters that he hasn't made very many charges in his department, but he will, as will Attorney General Olney and Secretaries Lamont and Herbert.

Judge Lochren believes he will kill one of the principal roots of the pension evil by making the Medical Boards which examine applicants for pensions entirely democratic, instead of allowing one republican on each board of three as has been done. Speaking of this change he is quoted as saying: "One of the things the democrats have committed themselves to do is to sift as far as possible the rubbish which has been drifting into this pension cesspool. The party has committed itself to reform in this matter, and there is no better way to make a start than by having only democrats on these boards." I do not state it as a fact that President Cleveland has approved this action of Judge Lochren, but it is hardly probable that such a radical change would have been announced by him unless it had been previously approved by the President.

Much more or less silly talk has been indulged in this week about the probability of war with China because of the Supreme Court having declared the Geary law constitutional. Needless to say neither the President nor Secretary Gresham have the remotest idea that there will be any serious trouble with China. The Chinese minnister told Secretary Greshan that his government would not take any retaliatory steps, and that it would, as far as possible, protect Americans in China from any attack which the ignorant natives might be disposed to make upon them The Geary law will be enforced by the administration to as great an extent as possible with the means at its command but the lack of a sufficient appropriation to pay for their transportation makes it probable that no Chinese will be returned to China until Congress shall have decided whether it will appropriate the large amount that will be needed—$6,000,000 is the estimate –to send the more than 100,000 who failed ro register in the accordance with the Geary act back to China or modify the law so as to allow those who are now in the United States to remain. Many Congressmen who voted for the Geary act have announced their willingness to vote for an amendment to allow the Chinese now here to stay, in preference to appropating the money necessary to send them to China.

The official contract by which the Cherokee Indians surender their interest in the "Cherokee Strip" to the U. S. Goverment was signed this week by Secretary Smith and the representatives of the Cherokee nation. The contract provides for the rentention by the government of 1,660,000 to satisfy the claims of the Delawares, Shawnees, and the Freedmen, there are yet to be received and aproved the instructions for making the seventy allotments to Chreokees residing in the strip, which, under the recent opinion of the Attorney General, will have to be made by the Cherokees from the 140 applicants. The General Land Office will, as soon as these allotments are made, prepared instructions to intending settlers, which are not expected to differ from those issued when Oklohoma was opened, and deyide the strip into countys etc. Officials now fix July 15, as the date of the opening of the opening of the strip.

President Cleveland has let it be very plainly understood this week that the rule of allowing Federal officials to serve a term of four years is not intended to keep republicans in office who have used their official positions solely to aid their party. "Prove that the man you name has been an offensive partisan," said he to a Senator and several Representatives who had called to ask for the removal of a republican official "and I will removed him as soon as I can find a good democratic successor."

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

The lateness of the season the cold and rainy weather has retarded the farming industry somewhat, some few of the farmers have planted corn but there is more to follow.

The outlook for a good corn crop is not very favorable but the forfeit is small grain will be good.

Some five or six received the ordinance of baptism last Sunday at Pioneer creek near Armstrong, they were applied to the water and not the water to them. And the Eunuch said, see here is water, what doth hinder me to be babtized.

And they went down into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch, and he babtized him, Acts 8 part of 36 and 38 verses.

Some of the republican press are quoting sayings of Chacey M. Depew, in words something like this, when Cleveland took charge of their government every thing was prosperous, times good and we were on a solid foundation, financially; now, in so short a time, less than three months, Cleveland has brought on hard times; mortgaged the whole country to the Devil and her Subordinates. And yet the present administration has had no session of Congress whereby to make or repeal laws either for weal or woe. All the brains, honest virtue and patriotism does not belong to any one party, but is scattered through the masses. Neither does power nor the spoils of office belong to any one party but to the people. It would be well to remind some who are so full of partisan prejudice that when Cleveland's first term expired he left a full treasury after an absence of four years he finds an empty treasury. He should not be held responsible for the mistakes others have made. For more than a century we, as a people, have been boasting of our country as one far surperior to any other, in way of liberty, prosperity and happiness. And now shall the love of power be made the bone of contention between the different factions on political parties, whereby to destroy all the principles of a free Republic. In last falls campaign the republican stump orators howled high protective tariff untill it bnried them so deep I fear they will never have a political resurrection. The good people of this country, Republicans, Democrats, Peoples party and Prohibition and all, want a country we can be proud of, but money and the devil is trying hard to correct Congress and our State Legislature for the aggrandizement of a few.

It makes us exceedingly weary to read that some of the Republicans are already trying to lay wires for Harrison's nomination in 1896. Deliver us from all such! If it is the desire of these people to deal the party its death blow, all they will have to do, will be to nominate Harrison again.—Litchfield Saturday Review.

The idea that mortgages are as a rule evidences of adversity is all nonsense. A mortgage is simple evidence of an option on real estate, just as people speculate on options in wheat or any other commodity. People in the east evidently have a good deal more sympathy for poor John Chinamen than those who live with him. So we in the North imagine how much better we would treat the negro in the South, and some people in the East theorize on how the Indian should be used. MISS PAULINE MARKHAM, the actress, slumped through a sidewalk in Louisville and broke one of her supports in two places. THE Russian exhibit is just arriving at the world's fair. It is reported that it was delayed by ice in the Baltic sea, but the facts are that Chamberlain P. SPAIN is said to have stopped the Cuban revolution by buying off the leaders of it. The people of Cuba now know how to raise funds whenever they get hard up. AT a Vienna theater an actor who saw that his love was flirting in earnest with another actor decided that he would perform the suicide scene in earnest, and thereupon blew out his brains before the footlights. SEVEN banks have failed in Australia since January 1, the aggregate of the failures being nearly $200,000,000. The Australian style of banking has now degenerated into "kiting" checks, and English investors have thus been taught another lesson as to the superiority of the United States as the place where money can be salted down to advantage.

A PENNSYLVANIA girl has brought a breach of promise suit for $10,000 against her false lover, not on account of lacerated affections, blighted hopes, mental distress and all that sort of thing, but because her trousseau and other preparations for the marriage cost that sum and she wants her money back. Now that sounds like a business proposition and here's looking towards the fair plaintiff. Business is business and money talks—in matrimony as well as in the other affairs of life.

THERE is an old miller, 94 years of age, living nine miles from Versailles, Ky., who has been running the same mill for about eighty years. He started it before the war of 1812, when but a boy, and the waters of the Elkhorn creek have kept it going for him ever since. He can shoulder a sack of grain with great ease, reads without glasses, and his mind is as clear as it ever was. Hid away in the quiet regions of Elkhorn creek, he scarcely knew there was a war raging around him from 1861 to 1865.

THE people of Havre have a centenarian of whom they are proud. He is Dr. De Boissy. In honor of his having completed his 100th year recently he was feted at a dinner given by the medical faculty of his native place. In accordance with French custom, he presided himself. After dinner he made a lively and amusing speech, which was much applauded. His father, he declared, lived to be 108 years old, and as for himself, he had every hope of going on for a long while yet, laboring in the cause of suffering humanity. During the late cholera epidemic Dr. De Boissy greatly distinguished himself.

A REMARKABLE specimen of needlework will form a part of the exhibit of clothing at the world's fair. It is the result of the wonderful patience and skill of E. Bosco, a Washington tailor. By working at odd times during the last eight years Mr. Bosco has completed a tablecloth fifty-three inches square. It is made of about 6,000 pieces of broadcloth of various colors, and the design is of a geometric pattern. Some of the pieces are very minute, and the stitches have been taken with such care and skill that they can hardly be detected. It is looked upon as the most remarkable specimen in existence.

THE women of Paris are about to found a female masonic lodge. Defeated in their attempts to obtain seats in the legislature, in the academy and in the municipal councils, they have determined to resort to freemasonry, their object being, so they announce, to "regenerate" this secular institution, to endow it with more "life" and "fraternity," and above all to drive all politicians out of the temple. The women say they do not intend to follow the example of the male lodges with respect to mysteries and theatrical ceremonies, and intend to remain content with the trimestrial and annual passwords.

LATER NEWS.

WITH a crash that startled hundreds of people, almost across the street from the city hall, a section of the Oriental building wall, in La Salle street, Chicago, fell to the ground the morning of the 23d. The accident happened just after a large force of men had gone to work tearing down the building to make place for the new stock exchange. Among the broken timbers and heaps of brick five men were buried. When the victims were excavated the casualties were found to be as follows: Unknown man, killed; Frank McDonald, leg broken; Stephen Madden, head bruised and scalp wounds; Adam Linke, severe bruises; Alex. Talzauski, severe bruises.

THE threatened strike of telegraphers on the Chicago & Northwestern road occurred the morning of the 23d, at 4 o'clock. At 5 o'clock a disastrous wreck occurred. A heavy freight train, composed of 20 cars of ice, hay and beer for Chicago, reached North Evanston, and, although the switch signals were properly set, struck an open switch and left the rails, the cars heaping upon each other, completely blocking all the tracks. The engineer and fireman of the train saved themselves by jumping.

AGAIN the city of Louisville, Ky., was visited by a cyclone. About 4 o'clock the morning of the 23d the storm struck the city from the southwest. Dwellings are ruined, streets are filled with the wreckage of roofs, with broken and uprooted trees, with remnants of walls and twisted wires. No lives are known to be lost and few of the injuries received are serious. The loss is estimated at $40,000.

THREE inches of snow fell the night of May 22d in the Gogebic range, in North Wisconsin.

A STORM bordering on the velocity of a cyclone struck Cleveland, O., the 23d. A scaffold blown from its fastenings seriously, and in one case fatally, injured four men employed by the Cleveland Gas and Coke company.

LAID LOW BY WIND.

Much Property Destroyed and Some Loss of Life Reported as the Result of a Furious Gale.

DODGEVILLE, Wis., May 23.—The township of Moscow, about 15 miles east of this city, was visited by a cyclone Monday evening, demolishing a number of residences and barns. One man has been killed, although when the strip traversed by the storm is fully heard from it is thought that other deaths will be reported. The Howe truss bridge of the Illinois Central crossing the Pecatonica river was blown down and no trains can reach this city for hours.

DARLINGTON, Wis., May 23.—A tornado passed from the southwest in a northeasterly direction about 2 miles north of this city Monday afternoon. In the township of Willow Springs several houses, barns and other buidlings were destroyed, and Mrs. James Bailey was killed and Mr. Bailey seriously injured. The houses of William Kruse, Ed Howe and E. C. King were destroyed. The timber in the track of the tornado is leveled. It is reported that Charles Cassidy, also of Willow Springs, was killed.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 22.—Heavy wind, accompanied by a heavy rain, much thunder and lightning, prevailed in this section all Sunday night, doing great damage to property and injuring a large number of people. It was one of the worst gales ever experienced here. The velocity over the heights between the twin cities was but little less than that of a cyclone. The damage in the city to plate-glass windows was considerable. Serious damages were sustained in all parts of this city, buildings, trees, plate-glass, bridges and boats suffering to the extent of many thousands of dollars.

At the state farm near St. Anthony park serious results were not at all unexpected during the night, and about 2 o'clock in the morning the fears were intensified by the sudden collapse of the cattle barn. The structure was 100 by 50 feet in size and contained fifty head of stock, but the wind was strong enough to lift the entire roof off and over the heads of the cattle. The walls fell outward, fortunately, and the animals escaped unhurt. A little later the windmill was torn to pieces, and by morning the storm had wrecked about $7,000 worth of property. Nobody was hurt.

DEXTER, Minn., May 23.—In a windstorm Monday morning the residence of O. A. Hearstead, 3 miles north of here, was blown down, completely wrecked and all the members of the family injured, Mrs. Hearstead seriously. The barn of A. Grabnue, of Pleasant Valley, was struck by lightning and five horses, together with other stock, consumed. The path of the storm is strewn with wrecked barns and but few windmills are left standing.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., May 23.—This state was visited by a heavy wind, hail and rain Sunday night. The house of C. Pettit at Madison was demolished and Mrs. Pettit seriously injured. At Salem the water is in the streets 3 feet deep. No loss of life has been reported.

YANKTON, S. D., May 23.—Six hundred feet of the Milwaukee railway track, two elevators and the Catholic church were destroyed at Ethan Sunday night by wind. The loss is estimated at $35,000. Several plate glass store fronts were broken here.

IN THE VAN.

Uncle Sam's Navy Leads the World—The Great Battleship New York Proves to Be the Fastest Cruiser Ever Built.

BOSTON, May 23.—With forward torpedo tubes buried deep in the sea and the water pushed almost as high as her forecastle the armored cruiser New York steamed across the line Monday, breaking the world's record and winning for her builders the largest premium ever paid in this country. When 21 knots was predicted as the speed for the new cruiser many hoped but few believed that her engines would ever be able to drive such an immense mass of steel through the water at this rate. When she crossed the line, however, with a speed of 21.09 knots through the water, and some corrections yet to be added for tide, the enthusiasm on board was intense. Monday's performance off the Massachusetts coast will be echoed from one end of Europe to the other, for it places the United States in the van among the navies of the world and gives us not only the most powerful but the swiftest armored cruising vessel.

LOSS OF $200,000 BY FIRE.

The Beatty Glass Works at Tiffin, O., Burned—Two Men Hurt.

TIFFIN, O., May 23.—The immense plant of the Beatty glass works factory, owned by the United States Glass company, is for the most part in ruins. The loss aggregates nearly $200,000, and 600 persons are thrown out of employment. The fire had its origin in the oil compressing room, oil being used as fuel in connection with natural gas, and was probably caused by spontaneous combustion. Within five minutes the entire rear and upper portions of the immense plant were in flames and the employes were compelled to flee for their lives, leaving their clothing and tools. Many escaped from upper windows and but two were injured—Peter Linden and Mat Caldwell, seriously burned. The United States Glass company paid $273,000 for the plant in January, 1892. The loss on the building will be about $50,000 and about $150,000 on stock, fully covered by insurance.

FATAL EXPLOSION.

Two Men Killed and Several Injured at Keene, N. H.

KEENE, N. H., May 23.—A battery of five boilers at Beaver mills exploded at 12:20 o'clock Monday, wrecking the building, killing and injuring a number of persons. The killed are Herbert G Holton and Lewis W. Starkey.

Frank Droulette, fireman, and George H. Carpenter are at the city hospital, the former dangerously, the latter seriously injured. Gregory Carpenter, Michael Roach, George W. Piper and William Clark were taken to their homes. It is not improbable that others are under the ruins.

Killed His Wife and Himself.

MARIETTA, O., May 23.—George Lankford, a young saloon keeper, shot his wife Sunday and then shot himself, both dying instantly. Jealousy is supposed to have prompted the deed. Three months ago Lankford's mother was killed by Nicholas Haas, her husband, who also killed himself.

A Remarkable Run.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 23.—The Empire State express on the New York Central road made the run of 146 miles from Syracuse to East Buffalo in 141 minutes. At one point a speed of 100 miles an hour was reached.

SLAIN AT COURT

DANVILLE, Ind., May 22.—A startling tragedy was enacted in the Hendricks county court room Saturday immediately in front of the judge's desk. J. C. Brown, otherwise known as Coley Brown, a wealthy citizen of Boone county and president of the Lebanon Natural Gas company, just after the case in which he was defendant had gone to the jury advanced on Lawyer Samuel Wesner, of Lebanon, principal attorney for the plaintiff in the case, and shot him.

The court had just taken the noon recess, but the judge and attorneys, with many spectators, were still in the room when the shooting took place. Wesner, who was one of the best known lawyers in his section of the state, had given Brown a fierce scoring before the jury in behalf of his client, Marton Hohl, of Lebanon, suing the company for damages. Wesner had exposed Brown's schemes against the water works and charged him with being opposed to public improvements generally, doing much to undermine his local influence.

At the close of Wesner's argument court adjourned for dinner and the jury was dismissed, the court saying that he would instruct them after the noon adjournment. Wesner took a seat near an attorney and was pleasantly chatting with him when his attention was directed to Brown, who was standing just inside the railing, apparently muttering something which those nearest him could not understand. Wesner was told that he had better keep an eye on Brown, as the latter was very much excited; but he replied that he did not fear him, and turning to Brown, said: "If you have a gun, pull it; I dare you to shoot!"

Brown had his right hand upon his hip pocket at the time, and, just as Wesner spoke, he put his right hand into his bosom. Quick as a flash Brown drew a revolver and fired, and at the same instant Wesner drew a dagger from his bosom and gained his feet. As he reached a standing posture and made a step toward Brown the latter fired a second shot and Wesner was noticed to tremble violently with a sudden impulse, and, as if nerving himself for the effort, he threw himself upon Brown with the uplifted dagger in his hand.

Brown caught the blade in his left hand as it descended and the two-edged instrument cut a deep gash across the palm, causing the blood to flow in a stream upon the floor. Wesner clutched at Brown's throat and the two fell upon the floor, but Wesner's strength was not equal to further effort and his hold gradually relaxed while he stared Brown in the eye with a look that plainly spoke his disappointment over his failing strength. As the hold of the dying man relaxed Brown shook him off and regained his feet and Wesner expired in a few moments.

In the meantime the most intense excitement prevailed throughout the courtroom. The jury was just retiring for dinner, the attorneys were arranging their papers and a number of ladies were just passing out at the door. With the first shot from Brown's revolver the scene changed like magic. The attorneys and jurors still in the room sought shelter under the benches and the ladies ran pell mell from the room, struggling in the doorway, which was soon blocked by the crowd, rendering exit impossible. At the second shot screams of the women added to the confusion, and the entire crowd was panic-stricken and rendered escape from the room impossible by reason of their terror. As Brown recovered his feet the sheriff reached the scene, having heard the shots from his office below, and at once placed him under arrest. The remains of Wesner were removed from the room at once and Brown was taken to jail, where he was followed by a large and intensely excited crowd.

As the news of the murder spread over the city thousands of people assembled upon the street and around the jail and for several hours there were grave fears that a lynching would be attempted. The fact that the community is one of the most quiet and law-abiding in the state, and that the older and cooler heads advised that no violence be done, saved Brown from the indignation of the people. At 10 o'clock Sheriff Taylor took the prisoner to Indianapolis to avoid the mob, which had become menacing.

THEIR BOAT CAPSIZED.

Two Wisconsin University Men Drowned in Lake Mendota—A Third Rescued.

MADISON, Wis., May 22.—On Saturday W. B. Strong, of Whitewater; D. B. Smith, of Fort Atkinson, and A. E. Coe, of Barron, students at the state university, started to cross Lake Mendota in a sailboat. When a mile and a half off the opposite shore the boat capsized in the strong gale which was blowing. All three managed to get hold of the boat, but Strong slipped off half an hour after the accident and two hours later Smith followed him. Coe clung to the boat, which drifted for three hours before he was sighted by persons on shore. A boat was sent out and brought him to the land much exhausted. He was well taken care of and is out of danger.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Suicide.

Benj. F. McCannon, of Anoka, committed suicide by taking a dose of aconite. He had been ill for some time and despondent. He told a neighbor of his suffering, remarking that "if it has to continue he had rather be dead." He seemed to be in good spirits on leaving home at noon, but was very ill when he returned shortly afterward.

His wife wanted a physician called, but he objected. His condition grew worse and the neighbors summoned Dr. Aldrich. Before the doctor arrived McCannon acknowledged taking aconite, but refused to take an antidote. The doctor forced him to take one, but was too late. He was the best known woodsman in the state. He leaves a wife and a son of 12 years.

Killed by the Cars.

A freight train on the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad killed an aged woman, Mrs. Oliver Olson, on a bridge crossing Le Sueur river, seven miles south of Waseca. She was deaf, and while crossing the bridge failed to see the approaching train until too late. She was hurled off the bridge down an embankment into some willows at the edge of a stream, life being extinct when picked up. Every effort was made by the train crew to stop, but being down grade, their efforts were not sufficient. Deceased was over 80 years old.

A Dam Breaks.

The dam holding the water from Lakes Ida and Miltona has given away, and a mighty flood is raging down the Long Prairie river. All the bridges west of Alexandria are washed out or stayed with ropes, and are impassible. Much damage must result to meadows adjoining the lakes and river. The water has been unusually high in all the lakes near there. About 25,000 acres of lake surface and surface water must find an outlet through the one river. There will be little damage to mill property and residences.

White Caps.

Warden Wolfer, when seen relative to discrimination in rates on binding twine from New York to Duluth and from New York to Minneapolis, said it would have a tendency to operate in favor of prison twine because of the advance in price. "While the price, 24 cents per hundred, is not high," said the warden, "I can see no justice in high additional charge made from Duluth to Minneapolis. Rates on hemp from Kentucky are 47 cents per hundred."

Kidney Trouble and Heart Difficulty

"Richford, N. Y., Jan. 11, 1893.

"Myself and my wife have taken several bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla with gratifying results. For years I have had kidney trouble, and also heart difficulty. I was unable to sleep on my left side for years. Hood's Sarsaparilla has done me a great deal of good. I am free from kidney trouble, and can sleep on either side now, thanks to Hood's Sarsaparilla. My wife has had a chronic sore throat for more than twenty years. It always troubled her more or less, but for the last six months, since taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, she has not had a sore throat except once when she took a slight cold. We cheerfully recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as a good reliable medicine for the blood and to build up the system; I consider it the best medicine in use." GRANT W. BARNES.

SPURGEON WROTE

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man. Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.

Yours heartily,

WE'LL COME EVERY MAY.

THROUGH the years that have passed in their noiseless flight,
Like the wings of a snow-white dove,
We have covered each grave with the pure blossoms bright,
The emblems of memory and love;
We have brought the white rose and the pale lily rare,
The bluebell and violet deep,
And twined them with smilax and pink hawthorn fair,
For the graves where our brave comrades sleep.

Their memory is ours, and we cannot forget
All the ties that are bound with life's chain,
So we garland once more the sweet mignonette
With the pansy and pink in its train,
The ivy deep green and the daisy star-eyed
We will blend in a circlet of hope,
And tenderly place them o'er those who abide
In the tents on each green sunny slope.

Each year when the summer, with fair wooing smile
And sweet dimpled feet, bids us come,
We touch elbow once more, with each comrade the while,
At the magic tap of the drum.
We fall into line with the old swinging gait,
And follow the flower-laden van,
With reverent step at each green grave we wait,
While the volley re-echoes again.

Every year we will muster our bravest and best,
Bearing blossoms that sweet fragrance shed,
And we'll scatter them over the mounds where they rest
In the deep dreamless sleep of the dead.
The tri-colored flag we will plant on each grave,
Unstained every white star and line,
In the soft summer breeze it will flutter and wave
'Neath the maple and whispering pine.

They may not take heed in their slumber so blest,
Fast asleep in the bosom of God,
They never may hear, in their long peaceful rest,
Our footfalls upon the green sod;
But we will remember with basket and wreath,
And the flag with its red, white and blue,
And we'll murmur a prayer for the boys beneath,
Asleep with the flowers and the dew.

Though our footsteps may falter, our eyes may grow dim,
And the silver crown every head,
Though the frame may be weary and halting the limb,
Yet we'll march with the old soldier tread.
As long as one's left to hold up the flag
We'll remember the graves of our dead,
We'll come every May, nor falter nor lag,
As we cover each low verdant bed.

—Helen N. Packard, in Springfield (Mass.) Republic.

MEMORIAL DAY.

Let the flowers fall
Over them all!
No more their trampling feet
Keep time with the quick drum beat;
No longer rushing in
To the bloody battle's din;
They sleep to-day,
The blue and gray,
Beneath the same protecting earth
That gave them birth,
That nourished them as boys and men,
And when
There came
The dreadful game
Of war, they played it as each one should
Of the same motherhood;
And dying in it, hopes and fears
Receive to-day that mother's tears.
The past is past, a newer life
Has risen from that awful strife,
And these, to whom we cannot tell
What union grew because they fell,
Shall ever be the tie that binds
The fellowship of nobler minds,
The nation, and the whole world great.
Let the flowers fall
Over them all!

WHITE VIOLETS

A STORY FOR MEMORIAL DAY.

THE first settlers of the small New England cities are buried in this ancient cemetery. Here and there are mossy stones with their inscriptions entirely obliterated by time, side by side with tablets of somewhat more recent date, but still ancient, and all along the family line the flight of years can be traced by the more and more modern style of art. Ever and anon a grave was distinguished by a Grand Army staff and by flags that seemed like perennial flowers to spring from the tomb. These were the graves of the nation's brave defenders, over which bright blossoms were to be scattered by the school children who form no unattractive or inconspicuous part of the procession now forming in the public square of the town at the foot of the hill.

Although a very ancient cemetery, it was well kept. There were graded drives, pleasant walks and places under the primeval trees where carriages might wait until the public ceremonies were over. The winds seemed to be recalling sad memories as they sighed through the tender foliage, and yet one could not be depressed by the thought of death, the myriad birds so filled all the place with cheery life. They were everywhere, fearless as the spirits of the departed. As they lifted their wings toward the upper air, they sang of purity and holiness; and, as they were followed with the eye, the mind was led upward by the branches of the huge old trees that seemed to be bathing their far-reaching fingers in the fleecy clouds that flecked the fair May sky.

In one of the waiting carriages sat a stately man in the regulation army blue, surrounded by a group of bright-faced young people who addressed him as uncle, seemed solicitous regarding his comfort, and hung on his every word. Soon, from the distant town, came a vibration in the air followed by confused sounds that the soft breeze disentangled until they defined themselves into a familiar military air. The gentleman's pale face flushed, and he beat time with his crutch on the floor of the carriage.

"Excuse me, and bear with me for a little," he said, dreamily. "I can never control the pulsation of my heart at the first roll of the drum tap or at the shriek of a fife. The sounds carry me back to the warm darkness of those nights camping beneath a southern sky, when the air was faint with the perfume of many flowers and heavy with a sad, brooding expectancy. We lay down to listen to the creeping footsteps of an enemy until overcome with sleep, and then our very dreams were filled with an undefinable, uncontrollable power of justice and destiny that was shaping our future, and that of the country for whose honor we were dwelling in this strange trance or nightmare that was more like a feverish dream than the bright, strong, healthy passage of youth."

"And yet those who fell at that time are the happy dead," said Walter, the young student, leaning forward and speaking with suppressed enthusiasm. "It is a grand thing to die for one's country."

"It is equally grand to live for one's country bravely, loyally and worthily," replied the veteran. "I sometimes feel that the strongest purpose of my life, now, is to impress that sentiment upon the rising generation."

"Mrs. Col. Copley is always talking in that way," said Walter's sister Helen. "She is standing in the lot just across the driveway—just look, uncle. Is she not lovely?"

"She is still handsome, but at eighteen she was exceedingly beautiful," replied the gentleman, glancing across the drive to a substantial granite monument, where, against the background of a huge, thickly massed evergreen tree, stood a woman of fifty in widow's weeds placing a pillow of English violets under the inscription:

"Col. Silas Copley."

"And you knew her at eighteen?"

"I had the honor of performing the ceremony that made her the brave colonel's wife. He was only a lieutenant then, poor fellow! The marriage was one of the romances of the war."

"Oh, uncle, tell us about it!" cried May, and the request was repeated with acclamation by all the party.

So, in the intervals of music and speech-making and greeting passing acquaintances, this story was told with the beautiful heroine in full view, sitting in an iron arm-chair within the shadow of the monument, and with a look on her face as if she were holding communion with the silent sleeper below.

"I love to look at her," said little May. "I have often seen her here. She lives in a handsome residence over on the avenue. I have been told that she comes every day, and I know there are always bright flags and fresh white flowers about the monument, almost always white violets."

"They were his favorite flower," said the veteran. "The casket was lined with them when he was buried. Their fragrance always had power to calm the violence of her grief. She said they seemed to bring him near, and she could believe that he was beside her, though invisible."

"When did you meet her first, uncle?" reminded Bertha, as the band rested at the farthest gate, and the children flitted hither and thither with their flowers.

"It was in '61. I had just received my commission as chaplain of the Twenty-third. I was full of Christian enthusiasm and patriotic zeal, as I left home to join my regiment at the front.

"The railway train was crowded. It seems to me now, as I look back, that trains were always crowded in war time, and that there were always bright-faced young fellows in blue uniforms, of which they seemed very proud. Often these boys in blue wore or carried flowers, and, if there chanced to be one not thus adorned, there was always at hand a sweet young girl with a nosegay with which she was only too happy to favor him. That day I remember I had my seat to myself for some distance, and then at a bustling station the most beautiful young girl I had ever seen entered the car, and as there was no vacant seat I offered her the place by my side, which she graciously accepted.

"Although she did not, as I expected she would, proffer me the bouquet of white violets she carried, we were not long about falling into conversation, and soon she was duly informed regarding my rank, name, nativity and destination.

"She listened with flattering attention, and said, as I paused:

"'You are then a regularly ordained minister of the gospel?'

"'I am, and have been a pastor for several years.'

"'Have you ever married—' she began, in a hesitating manner, and I interrupted her hurriedly.

"'Oh, no, no, I am single.'

"'I didn't mean that. Have you ever performed the marriage ceremony?'

"'Some score or more of times.'

"'Well, then, I am going to take you into confidence. I must trust some one. I am engaged to a young lieutenant who will meet me at the next station. Our parents disapprove the match. I have run away to-day in order to meet him at —— junction, and travel with him for a short distance. You could marry us as we were flying along in the train. We shall be in another state after we leave the junction, and no license will be requisite.'

"Everything was on a loose pulley in war time, and things in general went very fast. I gave a hurried glance at the situation and assented. The junction was soon reached.

"'The fragrance of the violets drew me to you the moment I entered the car,' said a deep voice, as a fine-looking young officer bent over my companion.

"We both arose to our feet. She divided the large bunch of white violets she carried into three parts, handed me one portion, fastened another to her lover's coat, and secured the remainder to her own corsage.

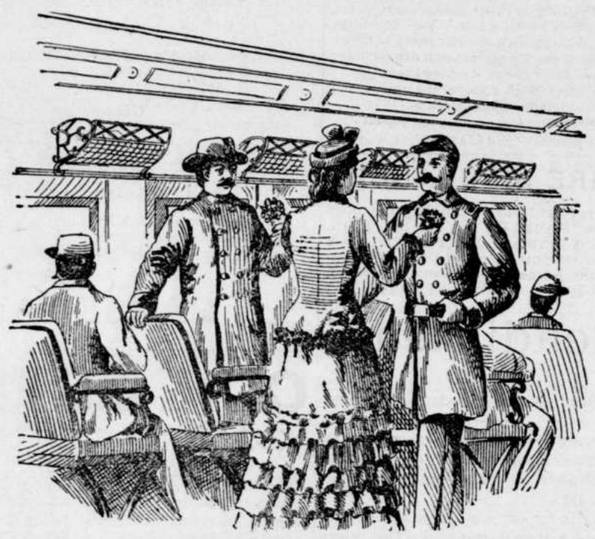
"'We will have a violet wedding,' she said, gently. 'This man is a minister, just commissioned as a chaplain, with the rank of captain. I have told him our story and he will marry us here and now.'

"I stood before them; everyone was occupied about his own affairs, and the ceremony was performed in low tones, and without attracting attention. I gave up my place to them, and, as the car was crowded, I sat on the arm of their seat with my back to them and screened them from observation.

"At the next station we met the train that was to take the sweet young wife back to her home. There was no scene at parting. The fretting, moaning and bewailing had all been gone through with weeks before. They felt now that they had conquered fate and all adverse circumstances. During those blissful moments true love had triumphed in spite of claims of country and tyranny of friends. He kissed her in dignified, manly fashion and looked at me. She gave a convulsive sob, drew down her veil and took my arm.

"'I will send your certificate,' I whispered, as I handed her over to the conductor of the up-going train, and could have wept at the sad little smile that accompanied her fervent 'thank you.' That included all the service I had been able to render her.

"I took the place by the young lieutenant and buried myself in my morning paper. Presently he threw back his head and looked in my face.



SHE FASTENED ANOTHER TO HER LOVER'S COAT.

"'Better is a neighbor that is near than a brother far off,' he said. 'I want to recognize you should we meet again. I can never thank you.'

"'Don't try,' I said. 'Tell me about yourself—prove to me that I have not been indiscreet.'

"'You have acquitted yourself like a friend and a comrade,' he replied. 'There was no reason that we should not marry only that our parents and guardians set their faces like a flint against it because we were second cousins. We had been companions from childhood, and our growing intimacy was encouraged. "They will always remain like brother and sister," had been said scores of times.

"'How strangely some people outlive their youth. It was so with these. They could not understand how the boy and the girl who had romped together and studied from the same book should, after a separation of a half-dozen years, fall desperately in love at first sight.

"'They laughed at us. They said we were too young to marry; that it was only a bit of sentiment enhanced by the romance of the time and my changed appearance in my regimentals. At length they said if I would give up my commission and remain at home we might be married. Of course we both scouted the idea. I was called away from home on some business arrangement, and while absent was unexpectedly recalled to the field. I have no doubt my wife's mother arranged it with my colonel, who is her kinsman. I sent a message to my love that I should pass through —— junction on this train and she slipped away to bid me good by—and returns home as my wife.'

"'She will keep the marriage private, of course.'

"'Not at all. We arranged that. She will announce herself as my wife and go at once to-night to my house. Thank heaven it will now be home; it has not been so since my mother died.'

"Poor fellow, he went at once into the thickest of the fray. In a week he had been promoted to the captaincy of his company, and in less than a month he earned a colonel's commission; but it cost him his life, and his body was carried home for burial. The poor young bride had been having a stormy time with relatives, but now from an object of indignation she became one of intense compassion. Her quiet but pathetic agony drew both families to her feet and held them there. So young, so beautiful, so brave, and so constant, she has had a legion of admirers, and it is true that one man at least has remained single for her sake.

"She lives quietly, and occupies herself in many benevolent enterprises. The relatives of deceased soldiers are her especial charge. The parents she has comforted, the widows she has cared for, the maiden sisters who have shared her bounty, and the children she has educated are legion.

"'It is only what my husband would do were he alive,' she says. 'I wish to deserve his commendation, as well as my Divine Master's "well done!"'

"She still wears her widow's weeds, and has always deported herself with the most beautiful dignity.

"There, the procession has left the yard. She is preparing to go. I must cross over and speak to her; I could not intrude before!"

The young people watched almost with awe as their uncle limped across the drive with his crutch as a support, and bent over the widow's hand.

Her beautiful face lighted at his greeting.

"Can it be that he meant himself?" whispered Bertha. "Is that why he has never married?"

He was walking beside the lady, with bowed head. As they passed the carriage the young people caught her low-spoken words.

"All days are Memorial days to me," she was saying.—Mrs. Annie A. Preston in Northwestern Christian Advocate.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Orange Ice Cream: Boil one pint of cream, dissolve in it three-quarters of a pound of sugar, and remove from the fire. When cool, add the grated rind of two oranges and the juice of six; stir in a pint of cold cream, and freeze.—Ladies' Journal.

—Stewed Tomatoes: To a pint of canned tomatoes add a little water. Place in a granite kettle over the fire. When boiling, season with salt, pepper and a slice of butter. Thicken with cracker or bread crumbs. Serve in side dishes.—Housekeeper.

—How to Dry Sealskin: If one is unlucky enough to be caught in the rain when wearing sealskin, do not try to smooth it with the hand or rub it dry with towels, or put it near the radiator or fire to dry. If it is dried in a warm room it will flatten, so spread it out in a cool room and leave there until dry.—Ohio Farmer.

—Ham Salad: Two pints of chopped ham, one pint of chopped pickles, two hard-boiled eggs. Put two tablespoonfuls of cream and two beaten eggs into a double boiler, add one tablespoonful of mustard, salt and pepper to taste. When boiled, stir in one and a half cupfuls of vinegar. Mix all together when cold.—Ladies' World.

—Scalloped Eggs: Moisten a teacup of stale bread crumbs with cream, put a layer in the bottom of a buttered dish. Slice hard-boiled eggs, and lay over with butter, pepper and salt. Continue until the dish is full. Sift grated crumbs over the top, spread with bits of butter, and set in the stove until brown.—Harper's Bazar.

—Apple Custard Pie: Stew either green or dried apples until soft and not very juicy. Mash fine or rub through a colander. Take of this pulp sufficient for a good-sized pie. Add two beaten eggs, one-third cupful of sugar (more, if the apples are quite acid), nearly one-third cupful of butter, flavor with lemon and frost as for lemon pie.—Housekeeper.

—Boiled Turnips: Pare, slice and boil white turnips in salted water. Drain thoroughly. Add two or three hot, mealy potatoes also cooked in salted water. Mash fine with a wire potato masher. Add a good piece of butter and a little pepper. Shape into a mound, sprinkle a little pepper over the top and serve hot. This is an improvement learned of our Swedish neighbors.—Good Housekeeping.

FOR GOWNS NEW AND OLD.

Several Seasonable Suggestions Relating Entirely to Costumes.

Really the nicest kind of gown for street wear just now, and a splendid "stay-by" gown for the summer season when we are traveling or visiting the world's fair, is a tailor-made costume of black or blue serge, with skirt just clearing the ground, and loose cut-away jacket, showing the prettiest of smart colored silk blouses. A well-cut black serge tailor-made gown, for instance, with a black figured old rose silk skirt, with a turn-down collar fastened with a dull-gold stud, and a smart black felt hat trimmed with upright bows of vieux-rose silk, and tan or black suede gloves, would make a charming and useful spring costume, one which could be worn on the boats later on.

But for a modish gown nothing is prettier than rainbow silk, princess back and front, only have it tight in the back and loose in front. No darts are needed. About the chest and under the arms pass a band of velvet of one shade that shows in the dress goods. Let the upper edge only be fastened down, leaving the rest of the band free from the gown. In the middle of the back and front slit the band so it will spring apart. Now, from beneath let a heavy fall of lace drop to about the hips. The fullness should show especially at the split front and back. Nothing could be more simple or more effective. The gown opens under the arms, but at the first glance it would seems as if it had no opening at all.

A charming design for trimming the silk skirts is that of a succession of narrow ruffles to the knee, pinked, and caught up in festoons by knots of velvet the color of one shade in the silk, the upper ruffle having a heading of folds and butterfly knots. Shirring on stiff cords is used on thin silks and cottons. The cords are in close-set groups of six or more, making perhaps an inch-wide band, and the goods is drawn upon them at the waist, around the yoke, at the wrists, at the head of ruffles, and so on.

A handsome black silk may be changed and freshened by a vest and panel together with collar and cuffs of cream-white ottoman silk striped with fine white cut jet, and when the whole costume is sponged and pressed it is transformed past all recognition.—Chicago Times.

The Aquarium.

The little old-fashioned "globes" for goldfish are disappearing, and so are the tanks made of window-glass cemented into a zinc or iron frame. The modern aquarium is cubical in form, and is made of a single piece of glass, without joints or metal with about one fish to each half gallon. The bottom is covered with pebbles and sand to a depth of an inch and a half, and in it are rooted water-plants that not only add to the beauty of the aquarium but absorb impurities and keep the water clear. If plants enough are used it is sufficient to add a cupful of water once a week to replace what has evaporated. If there are not plants enough the fish will stay at the surface and gasp until the water is changed. In marine aquaria algae are used and anemones and other beautiful forms of sea life thrive. They are as easy to maintain as fresh-water aquaria, because, as salt does not evaporate, they only need occasional additions of fresh water.—Detroit Free Press.

Jellied Veal.

Boil a knuckle of veal till the meat can all be picked readily from the bone, but not so long as to lose the flavor and nutriment of the meat. Chop fine, adding pepper and salt to taste, a few drops of lemon-juice and half a teaspoonful of Indian curry powder, if liked; strain the liquor in which the veal was boiled through a jelly strainer, and season as above, leaving out the curry. Add a good pinch of gelatine and let it dissolve. Grease a jelly-mold with a little butter and line it with slices of lemon and red beets cut in fancy shapes. Just before putting the mixture in the mold mix the meat and liquor together, stirring only just enough to mix; let it stand a few hours. Turn it out on a platter garnished with the tender white leaves of lettuce and little radishes.—N. Y. Tribune.

Be on your Guard.

If some grocers urge another baking powder upon you in place of the "Royal," it is because of the greater profit upon it. This of itself is evidence of the superiority of the "Royal." To give greater profit the other must be a lower cost powder, and to cost less it must be made with cheaper and inferior materials, and thus, though selling for the same, give less value to the consumer.

To insure the finest cake, the most wholesome food, be sure that no substitute for Royal Baking Powder is accepted by you.

Nothing can be substituted for the Royal Baking Powder and give as good results.

PAINT AND POWDER.

A Few Reflections for the Consideration of Womankind.

One may be disposed to forgive the woman who has been beautiful, if, in her desperate attempts to retain her beauty, she paints and powders and chooses to make of herself a thing of borrowed shreds and patches. But, says All The Year Round, when women tell us—as some of them do tell us now and then—that men like a woman to caricature her own womanhood; that they prefer—it comes to that—imitation beauty to the real article, they require of us a faith too great for ordinary human nature. To be told, as I was told a little time ago—and by a lady—that men do not care for women unless they paint and powder is to have too strong a strain placed upon one's natural civility. That this same informant was guilty of a perhaps pardonable feminine exaggeration when she declared that, nowadays, all women use both paint and powder I am assured. Had she confined herself to the statement that a very large number of women are indebted for what they call their charms to anything but nature she would have delivered herself of an utterance on the literal veracity of which she might safely have staked, as our transatlantic cousins have it, her "bottom dollar." The lady of fashion may not be aware that she is guilty of a reversion to savagery when she calls in artificial aids to the help of her natural attractions; but she is. Among savage people it is an almost general custom to revert to such auxiliaries.

Why Lord Sherbrooke Broke Down.

The late Lord Sherbrooke was an albino, and to this defect in his eyesight a painful scene in the house of commons was due just before he became a peer. He was a speaker of unusual brilliance and power and came into the house prepared to make a slashing onslaught on the ministry. His introductory remarks gave promise of a notable speech, but he had hardly opened fire on the ministry before he was reduced to utter helplessness by the discovery that there was some confusion in his notes, which owing to his weak sight he could not rectify. A colleague attempted to assist him, but the orator was so unnerved and mortified by this accident that he completely lost himself. The other members of the house were profoundly touched by the painful breakdown. The death of Lord Sherbrooke leaves but five living ex-chancellors of the exchequer—Mr. Childers, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Sir William Vernon Harcourt, Lord Randolph Churchill and Mr. Gladstone, who has four times held that high office. The present incumbent is Mr. Goschen.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. Fortune Seeking Emigrants.

Many a poor family that seeks the western wilds in the hope of winning a fortune, is preserved from that insidious foe of the emigrant and frontiersman—chills and fever—by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. So effectually does that incomparable medicinal defense fortify the system against the combined influence of a malarious atmosphere and miasma-tainted water, that protected by it the pioneer, the miner or the tourist provided with it, may safely encounter the danger.

"I THOUGHT Tompkins had given up using tobacco?" "He has; he only smokes the cigars his wife gave him for his birthday."

DON'T BE FOOLED by the dealer who brings out something else, that pays him better, and says that it is "just as good." Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is guaranteed. If it don't benefit or cure, in every case, you have your money back. No other medicine of its kind is so certain and effective that it can be sold so. Is any other likely to be "just as good"?

As a blood-cleanser, flesh-builder, and strength-restorer, nothing can equal the "Discovery." It's not like the sarsaparillas, or ordinary "spring medicines." At all seasons, and in all cases, it purifies, invigorates, and builds up the whole system. For every blood-taint and disorder, from a common blotch or eruption, to the worst scrofula, it is a perfect, permanent, guaranteed remedy.

—The Annual Camp Meeting of the Minneapolis Advent Christian Conference will be held at Armstrong, in Geo. Pagenkoph's grove, from June 3 to June 11th.

—Bicycles are growing quite numerous in our village. And amateur riders are seen strewn around promiscuously on the ground. They seem to be almost as unruly as the famous broncho.

—Peter Gallus and family, from Russia after a stormy voyage of 19 days on the briny deep, reached their relatives and friends in Delano on Monday. They will make there home in this vicinity.

—Julius Hardt, of Maple Plain, is in town concerning the new school house at that place. It is to be 30 x 60 feet, 2 stories with tower; to cost $2450.00. Swedeback & Erickson are to have it, on special contract.

—A couple of young men amused themselves by shooting a robin from R. R. Park Yesterday. A gentelman from the country saw it and thinks there is a law against such outrages. The young gentleman will, doubtless feel rather cheap should they be requred to pay the fine.

—Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Lindsley and daughter returned this morning from Chicago. They pronounce the World's Fair the greatest show on earth. But came home to rest up. Are about the tiredest people in town. Think there will be a still better exhibition in a few weeks, when they hope to see it again.

—As the evening train makes its appearance each evening crowds of young ladies flock over to see "who comes". This has become so common as to attract the attention of train men, traveling men and others, and is becoming a topic of general conversation. Young ladies if you do not desire to have your names known, or your pet names at least, from Breckinridge to St. Paul, keep away from the evening trains.

We would have every body know it,
And especially our spring poet,
Whose accusation bold,
On our first page is told.

—The Civil Engineer to establish grades of streets and and sidewalks has not yet appeared, and people go right on building where they please. Some day a great fuss will be made getting on to grade.

—The drain from J. W. Lindsley's cellar does not carry the water off and has been partially dug up and is being fixed this week. The village authorities should make a sewer allong some of the principal streets for such purposes.

—Prepare to take part in the observing ance of Decoreation Day. Efforts are being made to keep up to our record on accasions of this kind. Delano is noted for doing justice to what she undertakes. Bring out your flowers whether you are on a committee or not and see that the committee is well supplied in this line.

—On Tueasday quite an interesting lawsuit occured in Justice Walter's Court being that of M. A. O'Hair vs. Jules Lousier of South Haven on payment of a note claimed to have been given by the defendat to Erwin Gray. Defendant claiming to have payed his note, the plaintiff claiming that the fraudulent note was payed he holding the good one, Wendell for plainliff Cutting for defendant. A jury of six rendered the verdict for the plaintiff.

County Cullings.

"Sunday Musings" in the Waverly Tribune presents considerable food for reflection. T. E. is, evidently, an old hand at the business.

We are in receipt of a few sample copies of the American Farmer and Farm News, of Springfield, Ohio. It is an instructive and interesting paper to farmers and stock raisers.

The Buffalo Journal gives us credit for having better home editorial talent than our neighbor up street. Thanks Senator for the compliment. We believe you to be a competetn Judge.

The citizens of Howard Lake have started a subscription paper and expect to raise $200 to be used for extra attractions during the first three days of the fair, the $200 free for all being booked for the last day.

Editor French has not yet got through arguing bridge with some of the Buffalo citizens. Build your bridge honestly in the sight of all men and there will be less cause of argueing the "modus operandi" after they are built.

Dont forgit to be on hand on June 2, at the Grand Band Tournament, in Delano. A complete uniform for the Drum Major has been sent for and nothing is being neglected to make this one of the greatest affairs ever taking place in the county.

The dead body of Allice Leonard was found near Clearwater on the evening of Sunday May 14. She had left the house about an hour before to get the cows. At the inquest it was found that she had been brutally murdered. This is a case similiar to the one which occured at Montrose a couple of years ago, the death of little Annie Brunder. These kind of offenses are too common, and the strongest efforts should be put forth to find the guilty one. Women will not dare to leave the house, or stay alone indoors even, unless these kind of deeds are stopped. Lynching suspected parties is not the thing. But the guilty should be found and dealt with according to law.

We are in receipt of the following from the President of the Agricultural Society: "The executive committee of the Wright County Agricultural Society met at Howard Lake Saturday, May 20, and revised the premium list for 1893. Very few changes were made in premiums, the principal addition being a $200 free for all purse.

The date of the fair was fixed for Sept. 26, 27, 28 and 29, and will be one week later than the Mc Leod county fair at Hutchinson. It is expected that the Meeker county fair will occur either the week preceeding the Hutchinson or following the Wright county meeting, in order to make a convenient circuit for good horses. C. A. Beebe was elected Secretary, vice A. Rehnmuth resigned.

There seems to be some misunderstanding between some of the Buffalo folks and our present Board of County Commissioners. We are informed that the aforesaid County Seat people do not love the Commissioners; and that the Commissioners had as soon move the capital to any other place in the county, and hold their meetings where, without fear and trembling, they could, according to the dictates of their consciences, work out the difficult problems continually arising like mountain waves around them, threatening to engulf the whole county in financial ruin. So far as this board is concerned it is obliged, as others have been, to take things as they find them. If the Monticello bridge was started wrong it is hardly fair to attribute to the present Board all the evils that have cropped out along the course of its construction. That Monticello needed a bridge few people doubt. But that they should build it in opposition to the construction of the law by the County Attorney, and others seemed to be the trouble. We now have a new County Attorney, different from the one who objected to the earlier proceedings in the matter: and as fault was found with the old Board for not following the advice of the then County Attorney it looks now as if the same fault finders should not complain of the new Board for following the advice of the newly elected County Attorney. What is a County Attorney for, if not to advise the County Commissioners in affairs of this kind? And if his advice is to be disregarded his services had as well be dispensed with, thereby saying to the county the amount of his salary. This being the case wherein are the Commissioners to blame for blundering? Is not the County Attorney entitled to his share of praise, or blame, as the case may be?

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

POEM BY JOHN RUSKIN.

When our delight is desolate,
And hope is overthrown;
And when the heart must bear the weight
Of its own love alone;

And when the soul whose thoughts are deep,
Must guard them unrevealed,
And feel that it is full, but keep
That fullness calm and sealed;

When love's long glance is flark with pain—
With none to meet or cheer;
And words of woe ace wild in vain
For those who cannot hear;

When earth is dark and memory
Pale in the heaven above—
The heart can bear to lose its joy,
But not to cease to love.

But what shall guide the choice within,
Of guilt or agony—
When to remember is to sin,
And to forget—to die!

ONE of the best known printers in the State, Orville Gilbert Miller died in St. Lukes Hospital, St. Paul, on Tuesday May 30. Mr. Miller was a prominent Mason and had the honor of being the first in the state to have conducted for him the solemn funeral service of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. By the Molai Council No. 1 Knights Kadosh, at midnight, at Masonic hall. Lowry Arcade. In former years we had the pleasure of working under Mr. Millers directions and can add our testimony to the worth of the man.

WILLIAM R. ESTES, consul to Hamburg, formerly a resident of Madelia, this state is reported as having lost his job by indiscreetly sending to Gov. Knute Nelson some news for publication in a St. Paul paper. The Governor carelessly or otherwise handing over the entire letter to the newspaper and thereby "letting the cat out of the bag". Mr. E. is reported as having stated in the letter that as consul he dared not send news, and entrusted it to his friends. Perhaps under the circumstances the Hon. Mr. E, will be given some other situation to partially make up for the "big mistake". Blunders will happen, occasionally.

REV. W. W. SATTERLEE died, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Pye, in Minneapolis, on Saturday, May 27. In his death the cause of temperance loses one of its strongest advocates and most untiring workers. For years Mr. Satterlee has plead with the people for his cause. He has talked to the rabble, he has delivered lectures to the citizens of nearly every village and town in our State. He has preached temperance in the pulpit, and talked it on the streets. He has done some honest, earnest and hard work with brother ministers, at conferences, and individually. He lived long enough to see mank former lukewarm friends or bold opponents to his views, come over to his way of thinking. Now his labors among us are finished. His earthly work is done. His race has been run. And he has gone to his reward. Although his pleasing voice and pointed arguments will be missed his cause will be remembered, and at no distant day will some of his fondest hopes be realized. Though he be numbered with the dead will his works live after him. Some of the seed so well sown by so lavish a hand will spring up and bear good fruit.

THERE seems to be more opposition to the Chinese exclusion law than there was at first expected. Our friends of the Pacific slope begin to wander what they will do for section hands on their R. R's in the extreme hot summer months in Southern California, and for laborers of all kinds. Some are asking where will our cooks come from if they are taken away? Who will do our washing and ironing? Who will pick our abundant harvests of luscious fruit of all kinds? Still farther north the question is, how can our canneries run with out John Chinamen. In the mountain regions goes up the cry where will our vegetables for our tables come from? Do they not supply us with eatables in the spring almost before the snow is off? A task any one else would consider about an impossibility. Among people living east of the Rockies the question being debated is in case the Government of this free country begins to make class legislation like that where will they stop? What nation will next be called upon to pick up its duds and leave the country? And may not other causes besides the fact of being a Celestial be brought up as an excuse to rid the country of people who are not exactly to the liking of some of those in power? Will not a man be obliged to profess a certain religious belief, to vote a certain ticket as well as to come from a certain country before he can land here, or, having landed he must come under the rule or take up his bed and walk, no one asks more for the Chinese than for others. No one wants laws for their special benefit. All that is asked is for them to be treated as human beings, as fellowmen, as other people. That under the general laws of the country they love equal rights with others, with the Indians and Africans, with the Italian the Frenchman the Englishman, or the foreigner from any land, seeking a home in the "land of the brave and the home of the free" Then comes the question. Does not there exist a feeling among some of our citizens that this country is full enough. That it is time to call a halt. That this is a good place to make a begining. That when the fight is over and the question has been settled that the Government has the right to exclude from her shores whom she will, and to keep out those she pleases, the class against whom this law is to be used can be made to cover everything that suits the whim or caprice of a few. Immigration can be entirely stopped. We can live within ourselves. And if we leave the shore once we dare not return. The proper solution of this question is not class legislation. Is not to make laws for one nation different from those of another. It is to make general laws for the welfare of all citizens of the United States and for the free and equal rights of all. Let the matter be investigated by the people, let them understand the situation and a public sentiment will favor a just and proper solution of the matter.

Memorial Day at Delano.

Tuesday morning, May 30, Memorial Day dawned upon us in all the splendor of a Minnesota Spring morning. It was neither too cold nor too hot. The sun shone forth in all his majesty, while there was just enough breeze to gently float the flags at half mast on the liberty poles. All nature was at her best. Fields, roadsides, and trees dressed in green interspersed with the white blossoms. Buttercups shining like so many gold dollars in the meadows. Merry songsters warbling their joyful notes of praise to the Giver of all good. What a fitting time to call to mind the acts of those who went in answer to their country's call to face all the horrors of war; even death itself, on Southern soil, or at the hands of the wily Stoux, and whose bones now lie in strange lands, in watery graves, or that rest beneath the little mounds in our neighboring graveyards where each Decoration Day loving hands and tender hearts place garlands of flowers in fond remembrance of those who have answered the Master's call.

The procession was a l litte late in organizing but at about 10 o'clock started out led by Marshal John Cunningham on a prancing steed, and by the Delano Cornet Band, in their Band wagon drawn by four horses. A little band with silvered locks, kept pace to the music, and were a sad reminder of the companies and regiments of men in the prime of life and health who kept step like clockwork to the martial music. Then came forty carriages and wagons loaded with men, woman and children. The procession was orderly and proceeded to the cemetery South of town, passing along one of the pleasantest drives in the country, close by the bank of the Crow River which is now at a good stage of water.

At the cemetery the programme was carried out, save that Rev. J. R. Davies instead of Rev. Hilscher offered prayer. Fifteen graves of soldiers were decorated; after music and songs the procession returned to the hall, where the monument to the unknown dead was decorated by Miss Viola Cunningham.

The choir consisting of Rev. J. R. Davies, C. J. Buckley, Prof. R. C. Dewey, William Hawker, and Misses Tillie Coolen, Stella Moody, Grace O'Hair, Tillie and Lena Haffner, and Mabel Young, with Miss Mamie VanEman, pianoist, sang "Just before the Battle,"

Mayor Vorse, in a brief but exceedingly pointed speech welcomed the people to our village. He thinks there is no day so calculated to stir the American heart. All are met on one common level; regardless of creeds, religions, politics or nationality.

C. J. Buckley assisted by the choir, then sang "Wrap the flag around me Boys."

Rev. S. S. Hilscher then delivered the address of the day. He spoke of the triumphal return of the ancients from their wars. Of the fact that the empty sleeve is a reminder that there was a war. That Americans faced Americans. Heroes fought heroes. We have other battles to fight, and should be equally as zealous as were the soldier boys in fighting their country's battles. The address was appropriate, and was well received.

The choir then sang America: the audience rising and joining in the song. After which an adjournment was taken for dinner.

At 1:30 P. M. the band played at the City Hall and the procession re-formed and proceeded to the Catholic cemetery where there was music by the Band, singing, by the choir, decorating of soldier's graves. The band remembered their former comrade, Frank Fautsch and surrounding his grave rendered music in his honor. Rev. Lawrence being absent from the village no further ceremonies were had, but the mourning friends of patriotism returned to their respective homes to enjoy in peace, and happiness that for which their loved ones fought.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 26, 1893.

No more scathing arraignment of the methods of republican officials has ever been drawn by a republican than that which is contained in the official report of the investigation of the Weather Bureau, which has been made to Secretary Morton by Assistant Attorney General Colby who conducted the investigation. The report finds that the charges of official abuses, favoritism and entire absence of business methods in the bureau were fully sustained by the evidence, and concludes by quoting significantly the expense of the bureau during the last year it was under military control—610 606 -and the amount appropriated for the next fiscal year—$951,100. Secretary Morton will bring the matter to the attention of the President before taking action.

President and Mrs. Cleveland acquitted themselves handsomely of the unprecedented task of entertaining as the guests of the United States the official proxy of the Queen Regent of Spain, in the person of Princess Eulalie, the Spanish Infanta, and they did it without importing any European frills. After spending a week at Washington the Infanta and her party left for New York yesterday, where they will spend a few days before going to the World's Fair. The princess made things easy from the start by expressing the desire to be treated just as an American lady would be which fitted in exactly with the plans of Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland. The state dinner given in her honor at the White House is said never to have been surpassed in Washington.

Senators and Representatives who made no kick over the four-year fullterm rule of the Post office department are not taking kindly to the last rule of that department that no republican fourth-class postmaster will be removed save for malfeasance in office, or on complaint and proof that he is an "offensive partisan." The following conversation was told to me as having taken place between an Ohio democratic Congressman and Assistant P. M. G. Maxwell; Congressman—"I dont like your rule; it offers a premium to the sneak and the informer. Why shouldn't these men work for their party? Why should they be dismissed for doing it? I want them dismissed for being republicans, not for being good, working republicans."

Mr. Maxwell—"There are some vacancies in your district, and if you will name your men I'll appoint them at once. I mean those vacancies where the occupants have resigned.

Congressman—"Well, I won't make any recomendations in those cases. There are two kinds of republican postmasters in my district. One kind are manly and when their party lost they sent in their resignations. The others are a set of sneaks. and when their party looses they still hold on to their places. Your rule offers a premium and protection to these sneaks. At the same time you ask me to name successors to those who were manly enough to tender their resignations. I won't do it. I'll not be party to any arrangement which will cut of the heads of decent republicans and allow the sneaks to live in official safety."

Ex-Secretary Fairchild, to whom Secretary Carlisle recommended the Cherokee delegation which went to New York this week to place the $6,000,000 in bonds based upon the deferred payments from the government for the "Cherokee outlet," did a good turn for the Indians when he advised the delegation not to follow its original intention of negotiating the bonds in Wall street, but instead to advertise for bids for the entire amount of bonds to be opened here, and the members of the delegation showed their shrewd business sense by recognizing at once the value of the advice and accepting it. As the bonds will pay 4 per cent interest, which is more than the Government has paid on bonds for years, and are practically guaranteed, principal and interest, by the government, Sec'y. Carlisle having agreed to sign a statement to that effect printed across the face of each bond, it is expected that the bidding will be lively and that the bonds will be sold for enough above par to pay all the costs. That's the way democrats show their friendliness for the Indians.

Judge Lochren tersely defines the policy upon which he will run the Pension Office as follows: "The equal energetic and exactly just administration of the pension laws as they are found upon the statute books. If a man is entitled to a pension he ought to have it, and if he is not entitled to it he should not apply. The department is really a court of claims and it is the business and duty of its officials to enter upon examination of the papers submitted in each case with patience and without bias. So far as lies in my power this will be done. If public money is being paid to the unworthy it will be discontinued."

THE history of "The Star-Spangled Banner," written by Francis Barton Keyes after the bombardment of Fort McHenry during the war of 1812, may not be generally known. The ballad was scattered among the Federal Hill camps about Baltimore. A soldier read it aloud to his comrades. An actor named Durang hunted up a book of music, found the tune "Anacreon in Heaven," whistled note after note, exclaimed: "Boys, I have hit it!" and sang the song through. Getting a furlough, he sang it in the Holiday street theater. Soon it was sung in the streets and, at the war's close, all over the United States.

OPEN ON SUNDAY.

Over 100,000 Persons Visit Jackson Park to View the Beauties of the World's Fair—The Sightseers Admitted to All of the Structures Save the Government, Fifteen State and Some Foreign Buildings—A Quiet, Orderly Crowd.

CHICAGO, May 29.—The world's fair was open to the public Sunday. The attendance was big. It did not go anywhere near the figures which had been estimated, but it went far above the daily average. Saturday night it was anticipated that there would be between 200,000 and 300,000 persons in attendance. The count after 11 o'clock at night showed that 69,628 tickets had been sold at the gates. Add to these 3,751 children's tickets and the estimate of Mr. Tucker that 3,000 tickets were purchased down-town and the total of paid admissions foots up 76,379. The admissions on passes swelled the total to more than 100,000.

It was a leisurely, pleasure-seeking crowd. The people strolled around and viewed the beautiful sights to be seen on every hand. But five arrests were made during the day. There were no accidents reported.

Gatekeepers reported that the most noticeable thing in the crowds which kept their turnstiles clicking was the presence of thousands of family parties. Fathers and mothers, their children with them, brought great lunch baskets and came to spend the day in Jackson park.

Several of the Columbian guards said that most of the visitors seemed to be people who had not been to the exposition before. They did not know the names of the buildings and asked questions which showed that they were new to the grounds. Those who were hunting for some particular points of interest seemed to favor the Art palace, the Manufactures building and Midway plaisance.

It was hard to find what had the most attraction for the people. Everything had to them the charm of novelty. From the south pond to the lake shore on the north, where the foreign buildings stand in column, the crowds were almost equal in density. When Sousa's Marine band commenced to play sacred music in the north stand before the Administration building, 20,000 people were quickly massed on the plaza and there during the day was perhaps the chief center of activity.

Through the Manufactures building, where most of the great exhibits were thrown open, there was a continuous stream of people. The German section, crowned with its stately bronze, was especially crowded, and about some of the splendid products of German looms and potteries the people seemed to linger with almost reverence. They peered, also, into the French section, and looked at the statues and great vases with wide open eyes.

To many, the children especially, the Fisheries building was a great attraction, and there was a constantly changing crowd in and about it. Leaving the Fisheries the course of many was across to the Wooded island and down through the flower beds, riotous with color, to the Grand basin. Electricity building opened its magic doors to many, who looked on its wonderful display of electric effects with amazement. Agricultural hall and the palace of machinery were also visited by many. In the latter, which on week days is filled with the roar of great engines, was comparative silence. The palace of fine arts, stretching its impressive front along the north lagoon, was filled all day with people who wandered about amid its masterpieces with rapt attention.

The United States Government building was closed tight as a drum, and not even a flag was displayed. Although thousands sought the naval pier no one was admitted to the battleship, and the life-saving station was closed to visitors for the day. The Woman's building was open in all its departments, but nothing was sold, and the souvenir spoons, badges and paper-flower booths were covered with sheeting.

None of the machinery was running except the engines and dynamos of the electric plant and the big pumps that supply the fountains and service mains. Eighteen of the state buildings welcomed the public, fifteen barred their doors and seven were not near enough completion to take any action that would indicate observance of the day. With but one exception eastern state buildings were closed. On the other hand the west, except in three instances, kept open house. The buildings of the following states were closed:

Indiana,	Massachusetts,
Rhode Island,	New Jersey,
Maryland,	Connecticut,
New Hampshire,	Virginia,
North Dakota,	South Dakota,
Louisiana,	Missouri,
Pennsylvania,	New York,
Delaware,

The following were "open" states and territories:

Illinois,	California,
Wisconsin,	Colorado,
Michigan,	Maine,
Iowa,	Idaho,
Montana,	Kansas,
Nebraska,	Washington,
Minnesota,	Florida,
Arizona,	New Mexico,
Ohio,	Wyoming.

Great Britain locked the doors of Victoria house. The only sign of life about the pretty building was the union jack flying from the flagstaff. Canada, New South Wales and East India followed England's action and shut their doors.

Sweden threw open her doors for the first time, giving the public access to the galleries of the Swedish house. Thousands of Scandinavians climbed the broad stairs which lead to the upper floors of the quaint structure.

Fell a Thousand Feet.

TARBOROUGH, N. C., May 29.—Mrs. Steele, an aeronaut, had a thrilling experience Friday. She had made an ascension and was 1,000 feet in the air when the balloon caught fire. She tried to cut loose the parachute, but was unable to do so, and as the flames spread the balloon began to descend swiftly. Mrs. Steele kept her seat in the parachute and as she neared the earth she was enveloped in smoke from the fire above her. She struck the ground so violently that she was rendered unconscious, but later on recovered.

HERO OF THE CONFEDERACY.

The Remains of the Late Jefferson Davis Disinterred at New Orleans—Thousands View the Casket Before Removal to the Final Resting Place at Richmond, Va.

NEW ORLEANS, May 29.—Early Saturday morning the body of Jefferson Davis, in its copper receptacle, was transferred to a magnificent oak casket with heavy brass trimmings. The cedar coffin in which the remains originally rested was returned to the vault and it was closed with the marble slab upon which was the fac simile of the signature of Jefferson Davis, and it will remain in that condition as long as the tomb of the army of northern Virginia stands. The transfer was made early and privately at the family request.

The body was naturally decomposed, but was in fair preservation and the face recognizable. A guard of the Army of Northern Virginia veterans remained at the tomb all day. At 3 o'clock a mounted escort of Army of Northern Virginia veterans arrived, and shortly afterwards the escort conducted the casket in a closed hearse to the Memorial hall, which was reached at 5:10 p. m., and here the casket was received in silence by the United Confederate veterans, placed upon an oak catafalque and exposed to public view.

The ceremonies Sunday were marked by an absence of enthusiasm and were as simple as the funeral of an humble citizen, barring the military display. A fringe of people lined the sidewalks and uncovered heads were the order of the day while the pageant passed on its measured march to the train in waiting to receive the casket.

Thousands had viewed the casket on the catafalque in Memorial hall. There were humble boquets laid on the bier, the silent testimonials of those who could afford no more costly tribute of their love and respect.

It was 4:30 o'clock p. m. when the stream of visitors was checked. Only the gray-haired and gray-clad veterans who formed the guard and the escort, public officials, distinguished visitors and the Davis family remained in the hall when the ceremonies were about to begin. The narrow limits of the little building were unequal to the accommodation of a crowd, and many who had fought and bled for the south were denied the privilege of participating in the services around the bier.

Gov. Foster entered the hall leaning on the arm of Gen. Stephen D. Lee, and behind came Lieut. Gov. Parlange and leading lights in the ranks of the veterans. They gathered on the platform, mingling with the Richmond committee, who wore the confederate uniform in honor of the occasion. In a few minutes there was a parting of the ranks of the throng in the hall and Miss Winnie Davis, leaning on the arm of Mr. Ambrose McGinnis and followed by her sister, Mrs. Hayes, passed up to the platform. Both ladies were dressed in black. Then the ceremonies began.

These consisted of an address by Gov. Foster. Vice President Gilmore of the Army of Northern Virginia read the order of Mrs. Davis for the removal of the body and the letter of Mayor Ellison, requesting the Army of Northern Virginia to deliver the body to Gen. Glynn. Then Rev. A. Gordon Blakewell, who had served all through the four years of bitter war and who wore a confederate chaplain's hat, came forward and led the audience in prayer, the members of the Davis family standing with the rest of those who were present.

When the prayer was concluded sturdy veterans raised the casket from its resting place and bore it out the hall and down the stairs to the funeral car in waiting amid the strains of dirgeful music. The funeral car was the same that was used on the day of the funeral of Mr. Davis in this city. A guard of honor was selected from the escort and was immediately put upon duty, and then the public was permitted to pay its respects and to take a last fond farewell of the remains. The procession reached the train at 6 p. m. and it was nearly 8 before the party got under way. The train is made up of a locomotive and tender, baggage car, an ordinary coach, the funeral car, four sleepers and a private car.

Emin Pasha Dead.

BRUSSELS, May 29.—A letter received from Rascid Bon Mohammed by the governor of Stanley Falls leaves little doubt that Emin Pasha, the noted explorer, is dead. The latter says that an Arab chief named Said Bin Abed, in journeying toward Unioro and Wadelai, met Emin Pasha and his expedition, in a hostile manner. A severe battle ensued, and the fight lasted for three days. Emin Pasha and his followers were defeated and took to flight. Said Bin Abed and his victorious followers overtook Emin and captured and killed him together with all his people.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

A New Railway.

The Twin Cities are to be more closely connected with lake navigation. A new railway corporation has been instituted for the purpose of constructing and operating a line between these cities and the ports of Lake Superior, and the articles of incorporation have been filed in the office of the secretary of state.

The articles of association relate that a survey is to be made for the proposed railroad along the border line of the states of Minnesota and Wisconsin direct from St. Paul to the lake. The liability limitation fixed by the corporation is $2,000,000, and this is to include all bonded and other indebtedness. The incorporators are: Donald Grant, D. W. Grant and K. D. Chase, of Faribault; Samuel Grant, of Sioux Falls; Frank H. Anson, of Minneapolis, and William Dawson and Moses E. Clapp, of St. Paul.

A Woman and a Gun.

Mrs. H. Feldman, of Minneapolis, distinguished herself for pluck and bravery in an unusual way. For several days a fellow, who says his name is John Green, has been making a nuisance of himself in the vicinity of the lady's residence. One morning when he appeared, Mrs. Feldman secured a revolver and came upon him unawares. She called to him to surrender, but the sight of the revolver scared him and he started to run. Two shots were fired and the man was convinced that the lady was thoroughly in earnest and he surrendered. He was marched to a telephone station and the police was called. The result was that John Green was given 30 days in the workhouse.

Law Breakers Caught.

The illegal catching of fish in Otter Tail county is going to stop if a rigid enforcement of the game law will do it. During the past five years hundreds of tons of fish have been netted in the lakes of Otter Tail county and shipped away. Notwithstanding the new law, the netting has gone on this spring. A few days ago Gov. Nelson was requested to have the game warden sent there and stop it. Deputy Warden Frank Farnham went, and has made a killing. He found 15 or 20 nets, captured seven men and nabbed 1,000 pounds of bass and pike which the Northern Pacific Express company had just accepted for shipment.

The Work of a Vandal.

A terrible act of desecration was committed at St. Cloud. Catholics had on a high hill west of the city, overlooking their own and Protestant cemeteries, a pretty little frame chapel, costing $3,000. In it was a large, handsome image of the Virgin. About midnight an unknown man, alone, as footprints show, broke into the chapel, stole the image and took it a quarter of a mile to the potter's field, pulled up 75 boards marking graves, built a bonfire and burned it. While the fire was burning, he broke a dozen headstones. After leaving the cemetery he returned to the chapel, fired and totally destroyed it.

Killed by Gasoline.

A gasoline explosion at St. Clair, Stearns county, caused the immediate death of two children belonging to Frank Monaige. A servant girl was filling the gasoline tank while the burners were lighted. The third child, an infant, escaped death by being thrown through a window by the mother. The children were aged 10 and 2 years, a boy and a girl, and were burned to a crisp. The house and its contents were burned to ashes.

SHORT AND SWEET.

"Leu-can-the-mum Vul-ga-re"—oh, you have a long name, too,
You poor, dear little daisy; I can sympathize with you.
Does not your head feel heavy with that dreadful name to hold,
And don't you feel, Leucanthemum Vulgare, very old?
I do, dear, when I 'member, though they think my name is "sweet,"
And love to say it over—"Gladys Constance Marguerite."

And then, when you've been naughty, does your daisy mamma say:
"Leucanthemum Vulgare," in such a stern, sad way?
My mamma does—oh, daisy dear, how many times she's said:
"Now Gladys Constance Marguerite, go right upstairs to bed!"
And then I know I'm very bad, for that's my punish name;
Oh, daisy dear, do you suppose all mammas do the same?

But I love best to call you, dear, just "Daisy;" for you see
That's my pet name, the very same that every one calls me;
And we are twins now—are we not?—for both of us have woes,
About our long, long "punish names," that no one ever knows.
They may be "grand and "dignified" and "sweet" and all the rest,
But we both love, dear—don't we?—our short Daisy names the best.

—Abbie F. Brown, in St. Nicholas.

RATHER REMARKABLE.

A Good Story of Two Very Queer Proposals.

An orchard separated Mr. Fisher's door-yard from Mr. Dunbar's. The two families were very good friends, and used the path which led from one garden to the other as a means of a quicker communication than the road.

Both families kept summer boarders. Across the road, and a beautiful stretch of meadow, was the sea rolling in on a wide sandy beach.

Harry Curtis and Will Blake came down from their business in Boston every Saturday night and boarded at the Fishers' over Sunday.

During the summer the same thing had happened to both of them. They had both fallen desperately in love with Miss Grace Derry, who boarded at the Dunbars'.

It was Sunday. Harry had taken a hammock and Will a reclining chair out under the apple tree to read.

Over on the Fishers' porch they could hear Grace's voice singing to her own guitar accompaniment. It was a sweet voice, and it brought her face vividly into the minds of both young men. Harry was thinking:

"I will get up presently and stroll over and ask her to go out for a drive on the beach to-night."

Will drew himself slowly out of his reclining chair and yawned indifferently.

"Well, I guess I'll leave you," he said, and went down the orchard path and over to the porch where Grace was sitting.

"Come, walk down to the beach with me, will you?" he asked.

"Yes; only wait until I get my hat and put away my guitar."

Across the road and down through the meadow they strolled to the beach. Grace dropped down on the sand looking out across the rolling blue-green waves:

"I am so happy," she said. "Some say the sea makes one gloomy, but it doesn't me. This has been the happiest summer of my life."

"It has been the happiest summer of my life, so far," he said, "but the summer is not half over. You have it in your power to make it completely happy. I wonder if you will?"

Grace looked at him quickly, but did not speak.

"You know you told me you liked rubies better than any other stone," he said, after a moment. He put his hand in his pocket and drew out a little morocco case and laid it in her lap. "See how you like those."

Grace opened the case. There was a little ring, set beautifully, with three small rubies. She gave a gasp of delight.

"Oh, how perfectly lovely!"

Then she looked at him curiously and closed the case and held it out to him. He folded his hands around his knees and looked across the sea.

"Could anything induce you to put that ring on your third finger?" he asked.

Grace dropped the case on the sand. "I don't know what you mean!" she said.

He turned and caught both her hands in his.

"It seems that I love you, Grace, more than all else in the world. Don't tell me you do not love me in return!"

She drew her hands away slowly, and stood up.

"Did you get that ring for me?"

"Yes, I got it in the hope it would be yours some time. Oh, Grace, don't say you don't care for me."

"Well, you did have faith in me to go and get that ring before you knew. I never heard of such a thing!" she said, indignantly.

"You can throw the ring into the ocean if you'll only tell me that you love me. I thought that was a nice way of telling you. I see I've made a fool of myself."

He caught up the case from the sand and threw it far out into the waves.

"Oh, how could you? That beautiful ring!"

She turned and walked across the beach and he followed her.

"I'll dive till I get it if you say so. You do love me, Grace! say that you do!"

"No," she said, "I don't, and I think this is the queerest proposal I ever heard of—the idea of you daring to get that ring before you'd asked me!"

"I never dreamed you could be so heartless and cruel," he said, angrily. Then he turned and walked away in the other direction up the beach.

Harry Curtis went through the orchard after supper and found Grace on the porch. She got up and went to meet him.

"I want to see Mr. Blake," she said. "Will you go and send him over here?"

"Well, no," Harry answered; "I can't, for the reason that he took the five o'clock train to Boston."

"Well, never mind. I—I don't know, but I'd rather write it to him, anyway," Grace said.

"Oh, you would!" Harry answered. "Now, perhaps you don't care about a moonlight ride with me?"

"Yes, I do; but I must write to him before I can sleep."

This confidence did not make Harry particularly happy, but he went for the dog cart.

Harry was silent and gloomy on the ride, but Grace was very happy and talked on ceaselessly.

"Isn't everything beautiful? I don't feel as though I ever was unhappy or ever could be again," she said, looking out across the moonlit water.

"Say, Grace," Harry asked, turning suddenly toward her, "it's none of my business, but did Will propose to you this morning?"

Grace looked at him a moment without answering.

"Yes, he did. How dare you ask such a thing?" she said.

"Oh, I just thought I'd like to know," Harry answered, indifferently. They drove on for some time in silence.

"But I refused him," Grace said at last, with a little laugh. Harry looked at her quickly.

"You did! Then why must you write to him before you sleep?"

"I wasn't kind to him. I wanted to say I was sorry."

"And ask him to come back, I suppose?" Harry said.

"No; but he proposed in such a queer way, and I was so angry, I didn't think till afterwards that perhaps he really did care very much, and—but I won't tell you any more."

"I wonder if I could propose to suit you," Harry laughed; "I wouldn't care to have Will's luck."

He put his hand in his pocket, and drew out a little morocco case, and threw it into her lap.

"I'm not going to say anything unless you'll put that on."

Grace opened the case, laughing. This was the way Will had begun, but some way it did not seem the same at all.

A diamond sparkled out from the blue silk lining. This was not the same, either. She put it on and held out her hand to him.

"Wasn't that a neat way of doing it?" he asked, proudly. "You see if you had wanted to refuse me you could just have handed back the ring and that would have been all there was to it. But now—" There was an eloquent pause.

"What would you have done if I had given back the ring?" Grace asked, perfectly happy.

"Oh, I should have thrown the unlucky thing into the ocean and taken the next train to Boston."

"Why, that's exactly what Will did!" Grace said, looking at him quickly.

"What! You don't mean it!"

He did not tell her that Will had been reading the same novelette that he had, in which the proposal ended as Will's had done; and so she always thought the similarity of her two proposals a most remarkable coincidence.—Boston Globe.

SHE SAID A HARP.

A Gay Deceiver Who Got Left for Once in His Life.

He had made love to a thousand girls and he had told the same story of loyalty and devotion to each one.

At first it was accepted as true and a few tender young hearts were strained almost to the breaking point, but in time the objects of his adoration caught on and he was not such a heart smasher as he thought he was.

Last winter or early this spring a young Detroit woman crossed his path.

She was beautiful, rich and responsive, and he threw himself at her feet.

She rather liked the idea of his being there, though she knew him better than he knew himself, and she did not disillusionize him.

One day she sat idly listening to his tale of love and she was getting tired.

"I would," she said, "I had a harp whose strings I might touch and find a chord responsive to my own heart's yearning."

He caught her hands in his fervently.

"Dear one," he murmured, "take me."

She drew her hand away icily and looked at him with a cruel glitter in her lovely eyes.

"I said a harp," and the words came as the blows of a heavy hammer; "I said a harp, not a lyre."

And then he smote his mouth with a club and went forth and kicked himself. —Detroit Free Press.

Would See Her Later.

Coming over from the east side the other day a university car was filled with all sorts and conditions of passengers, conspicuous among them being a crowd of jolly university students. Opposite the boys sat a hard-featured female evidently on her way from a meeting at the exposition. Next her sat a bright-faced woman talking with a friend. Naturally the talk drifted upon the subject of the revival meetings, and the friend asked: "I suppose you have been to some of them?"

"No, I have not," the other replied. "I haven't had time," and as she spoke she signaled the conductor to let her off the car.

At her words the hard-featured female sitting next to her quickly turned and leaning forward said in solemn tones: "Haven't had time! Will you have time to go to hell?"

The car had stopped, and as the lady reached the door she hurriedly retorted: "If I have I'll see you later."

Then she stepped into the street perfectly conscious of having been able to squelch a woman who didn't know enough to mind her own business.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Sermon to Measure.

Dr. X—— is an eloquent preacher, but he belongs to the old-fashioned school, and finds it difficult to adapt himself to the modern fashion of short discourses. It is a standing joke in his family that after writing a sermon he has cut it up into a series of discourses. On one occasion he received a note from a well-known clerical brother, asking if he would deliver a sermon upon some especial church festival. The doctor replied that he had just completed a sermon upon the golden calf which seemed to him appropriate. The answer of the committee, as sent by telegram from the brother clergyman, who knew Dr. X—— intimately, and was acquainted at once with his peculiarities and with his ability to take a joke, read as follows:

"Golden calf just what is wanted. A forequarter is all that will be needed."—Detroit Free Press.

Wanted Light on the Subject.

A native of Troon, on the coast of Ayrshire, Scotland, when the contract for lighting the first three steamers fitted for electric light at the Troon shipyard was completed, formed one of a social party gathered to treat the electricians who had made the installation and otherwise celebrate the event. In a burst of candor and comradeship he was overheard saying to one of the wiremen: "Man, Peter, efter workin' wi' you on they boats, I believe I could put in the electric licht mysel', but there's only ane thing that bates me." "Aye, what is that?" said his interested companion, willing to help him if it lay in his power. "It's this, man; I dinna ken hoo you get the ile along the wires!"—Electrical Review

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Ham Gravy: Cut the slices of ham into strips and boil in sufficient water for gravy; when tender add salt and pepper and a thickening made from one egg well beaten, four tablespoonfuls of sweet milk or cream, and one tablespoonful of flour.—Ladies' World.

—Chocolate Filling: Boil together two cupfuls of white sugar and two-thirds of a cupful of sweet milk or water, until it is "ropy." Then remove from the fire and stir constantly until cool. The grated square of chocolate may be stirred through the frosting or sprinkled over each layer of cake.—Housekeeper.

—Tomato Soup: Boil a pint of canned tomatoes. Ten minutes before wanted, cook a tablespoon each of butter and flour in a skillet without browning, stirring all the time. Add the tomatoes, in which have been placed a small pinch of soda, a pint or more of rich, sweet milk, salt and pepper, and serve. —Housekeeper.

—Charlotte Russe: Take a pint of rich milk and soak a third of a box of gelatine in it. Make a pint of egg custard, flavor with a tea-spoonful of extract of vanilla, add the gelatine when cool and thick, stir in a pint of whipped cream. Line a mold with slices of stale sponge cake, pour in the mixture and set on ice to harden.—Woman's Journal.

—Plain Cookies: Two eggs, one and one-half cups of sugar, one cup of butter (or half a cup each of lard and butter), one-half cup of cold water, one small teaspoonful of soda; flavor to taste. If it is desired to make them soft, thick cookies, mix in only enough flour to handle the dough, and roll out thick; if wanted thin and crisp, mould stiff with flour and roll out thin.—Ladies' World.

—Plain Welsh Rarebit: Put into the chafing-dish one pound of grated cheese, English dairy cheese is recommended; one tablespoonful of butter, a quarter of a tablespoonful of salt, a goodly quantity of pepper or one-eighth of a teaspoonful of red pepper; stir the ingredients and as soon as the cheese begins to boil add a half-teaspoonful of tomato catsup. Serve on buttered toast. —N. Y. Observer.

—Sponge Cake: Take ten eggs, their weight in sugar, half their weight in flour, two teaspoonfuls each of vanilla extract and lemon juice, a pinch of salt; beat together the sugar and the yolks of the eggs; beat the whites till they stand alone; mix the whites with the yolks, add the flavoring, then the flour, work as quickly as possible. Put into pans, and bake in an oven not too hot.—Harper's Bazar.

—Columbian Pudding: Boil a teacupful of milk, and when partly cool flavor highly with vanilla. Slice thin and lay in a deep dish a half pound of almond sponge cake. Pour over it the hot milk and a quart of cream. Add two ounces of pounded almonds, half a pound of pulverized sugar and half a dozen well-beaten eggs. Stir these in lightly, and at once place in a moderate oven and bake to a delicate brown. Eat with a hot sauce or whipped cream.—Orange Judd Farmer.

—Corn-Fritters: If you are tired of plain canned corn, try these corn-fritters. They are nice for breakfast, for lunch, or as a side dish for dinner, when the variety of vegetables is small. To one can of corn add one teacupful of sweet milk, two eggs, a half teaspoonful of salt, and flour, prepared with baking-powder, enough to make a very stiff batter. Drop this batter by spoonfuls into boiling lard or drippings, and fry the same as doughnuts. —Farm and Fireside.

—Poisoning by Ivy: I have found a free use of cold water to be the best remedy for poison vine. Formerly I suffered long and severely. Now on the first appearance of the poisoning on the skin, no matter on what part of the body, I pour cold water on it until thoroughly chilled. On re-appearance of the fever or redness with itching, I again douche as fully as at first, and repeat if necessary several times. If the face is poised lie down and shut the eyes, letting another do the pouring when the hands have touched the poisoned skin be sure to wash them at once; no one need suffer more than twenty-four hours who uses cold water as above.—Home.

The Green Veil.

The green veil is the rage, and it is fearful to behold some of the women behind it. Green is nature's color. It is the one tint that everybody can wear with pleasing effect. But there are greens and greens, and the wrong green is worse than ugly—it is positively repulsive. The woman with a paralyzed liver, with a bilious complexion, with freckles, with saucer eyes or with a thin face, in which the shades gather, will be ghastly under a yellow green. She must not accept a present of any stuff bordering on the lettuce, tendril or what is known as spring greens, unless she wants to suggest quarantine. Grass, ivory, oak, migonette, asparagus and myrtle greens are always good, but beware of the olives, maple and flower shades. Babies and young children can wear anything, but maturity must study the effect of things if she wishes to make the most of her charms.—N. Y. World.

Kitchen Aprons.

Woolen aprons are recommended either to cooks or other women who are constantly about a hot stove. The aprons may be made from a light-weight, loosely woven woolen, and are certainly a wise precaution against those accidents from fire that happen every few days. At the large stores there are ready-made woolen petticoats, the cheapest of which are fifty cents, that may be cut open and used for aprons. They need only be used for cooking and ironing, and the gingham apron used at other times. Washed in water containing a little ammonia, they are as easily cleaned as aprons of cotton.—N. Y. Post.

—Mrs. McDuffigan—"Have ye taken yer little gerrel away from the school?" Mrs. O'Diffigan—"I have; she was gettin' that smart that I cudn't open me mouth that she wouldn't be correctin' me speech, so I thought it was time for her to be earin' her own livin' an' I sint her to work in the factory."—Brooklyn Eagle.

—How He Lost His Supper.—Tommy—"Paw, did you go to Sunday-school every day when you was a boy?" Mr. Figg—"Of course, I did. Why?" Tommy—"I thought you may be went only on Sundays."—Indianapolis Journal.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Carlyle's old home in Chelsea, London, is occupied now by Elizabeth Ann Cottrell, a widow. The greater part of her household consists of fifteen dogs, seven of which a recent visitor saw lying in their mistress' lap as she ate her breakfast.

—Judge William Lochren, the new pension commissioner, has a brilliant war record. He served at Gettysburg as first lieutenant in a regiment of three hundred men. He emerged from a conflict with Pickett's division in command of forty men.

—Gov. John E. Osborne of Wyoming is the youngest governor in the United States. He is only thirty-four, a doctor by profession, very good-looking, of pleasing address, and went from Vermont to the west some fourteen years ago, though a native of New York.

—George I. Seney, the millionaire philanthropist of Brooklyn, who has just died, disposed of a good share of his property while living. He gave as reasons for so doing that he was sure of its going where he desired, and he could enjoy the good he saw it was doing others.

—Christian Joachim Mohn, a Norwegian linguist, who was acquainted with more than sixty languages, most of them Oriental tongues, died at Naples not long ago, at the age of eighty-five years. He used to be a familiar figure in the British museum, and was well known in most continental European cities.

—There are now not less than 2,133 literary women in Paris, of whom 1,211 write novels or books for children, 217 pedagogical works and 280 devote themselve to poetry. The others do not limit themselves to any department of literary work. Of this number 1,219 belong to the Societe des gens de lettres and 32 to the Societe des auteurs dramatiques.

—Olive Thorne Miller, who is prettily distinguished as "the birds' best friend," has been entertained by the Lend-a-Hand club of Baltimore. Mrs. Miller read one of her delightful papers, and made a deep impression upon her audience. Her strong personality is modified by a rare sweetness and motherliness of expression, and her manner is winningly attractive.

—Queen Victoria's hand is not of fairy-like proportions by any means. She wears gloves of the size of 7½. They are always black, and always shorter than the fashion of the hour demands. She began at the beginning of her reign with one-button gloves, and has advanced only to four-button gloves. She wears only about two dozen pairs a year, and each pair costs the royal wearer only 8s. 6d.

—The room in which M. Jules Ferry died was transformed into a mortuary and hung with draperies worked in silver. The senate voted twenty thousand francs to cover the expenses of the public funeral. A part of the great Frenchman's will reads as follows: "I order the interment of my body in the St. Die cemetery, where repose my mother and sister, with my face turned toward the blue line of the Vosges, whence I heard the cries of the vanquished."

—Henry James contributes to a recent number of Temple Bar some reminiscences of Fanny Kemble. That she had an incisive tongue is shown in the following statement: "To a lady who had been brought wonderingly to call upon her, and who the next day caused inquiry to be made whether she had not during the visit dropped a purse in the house, she requested an answer to be returned that she was sorry her ladyship had had to pay so much more to see her than had formerly been the case."

—Senator Harris, president pro tempore of the senate, is acknowledged to be one of the best parliamentarians in congress. He has a punctilious regard for the proprieties and decorum of his position, and ordinarily is "as gentle and soft as velvet," as a correspondent has said of him, but when the dignity of his position is affronted he resents the breach without mercy. The senator is also able, when occasion demands, to put a point to his words that has the penetrative sharpness of a stiletto.

Smith—"How, then, do you know that money is hard to collect?" Jones—"Because several people have tried to collect of me."—Yankee Blade.

—A red-cheeked young man with a Marlborough hat and a diffident air sat in a Niagara-street car last night. A tall girl with a fur-trimmed cloak and a pair of roguish eyes sat next to him. This state of affairs continued until Jersey street was reached. Then the young woman rose to leave the car. She stepped full and fair on one of the red-cheeked man's feet. "Ouch!" said the young man. "I beg your pardon," said the young woman prettily. The young man blushed and moved uneasily in his seat; then he stammered, "You are perfectly welcome." And the conductor laughed.—Buffalo Express.

AN ELOQUENT PLEA.

A Parody on Brutus' Speech and a Clever Retort Excused Even a Poacher.

A strolling player was once caught performing the part of a poacher, says the Million, and the implacable gamekeeper took him before the magistrates. One of the country landlords sitting on the bench asked him what right he had to kill a hare, when the actor replied in the following parody on Brutus' speech to the Romans in defense of his killing Cæsar:

"Britons, hungry men and epicures! Hear me for cause—and be silent that you may hear; believe me for my honor—and have respect for your honor that you may believe; censure me in your wisdom—and awake your senses, that you may be the better judges. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of this hare, to him I say that a poacher's love for hare was not less than his. If, then, that friend demands why a poacher rose against a hare, this is my answer: Not that I loved hare less, but that I loved eating more. Had you rather this hare were living than I had died quite starving—or that this hare were dead that I might live a jolly fellow? As the hare was pretty I weep for him; as he was plump I rejoice at it; as he was nimble I honor him, but as he was eatable I slew him. There are tears for his beauty, joy for his condition, honor for his speed and death for his toothsomeness. Who is here so cruel would see me a starved man? If any, speak, for him I have offended. Who is here so silly that would not take a tidbit? If any, speak, for him have I offended. Who is here so sick that does not love his stomach? If any, speak, for him have I offended."

"You have offended justice, sirrah," aried one of the magistrates, out of patience with this long and strange harangue, which began to invade the time which his own stomach told him had arrived.

"Then," replied the culprit, guessing at the hungry feelings of the bench, "since justice is dissatisfied it must needs have something to devour. Heaven forbid I should keep any justice from dinner; so, if you please, I'll wish your worships a good day and a good appetite."

The magistrates, pleased with the actor's last wish, gave him a reprimand and let him go.

ENGLISH NOBILITY.

LORD SHANNON, who before his succession to the title served on a ranch in Manitoba, is now known among his friends as the "Cowboy Peer."

THE new duke of Bedford is as fond of rural seclusion as his brother was, and has hardly been seen in London since his return from India.

PROFOUND disappointment is reported in English royal family circles because the second infant of the duchess of Fife is a girl. The prince of Wales and the duke of York are still the only male heirs to the throne.

LORD MONKSWELL has succeeded in getting the approval of the British house of lords for a return that is to set forth what each peer draws from the government in the way of salary, pension pay or other allowance.

SIR JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE'S salary has been increased from $30,000 to $35,000 in consequence of his promotion to the rank of ambassador to this country. This makes his compensation exactly double that paid to our ambassador to the court of St. James.

FASHION NOTES.

THE round, half low neck is liked for dancing dresses for young ladies.

ACCORDION plaiting seems to be one of the standard effects that the first-class customer reserves for fine thin goods.

A NEW idea in waist trimming is a draped front caught down with milliner's folds, that are sewed on at the shoulder seams, and brought to the waist-line at the bodice point, making a V-shaped plastron effect of small puffs.

PUFFS and ruffles are seen on some of the newest skirts. A fine light-weight Henrietta cloth is made with a bias section of the material about ten inches wide, arranged in a loose puff. At the upper edge it is finished with a two-inch fold, and above this is a flat milliner's fold.

HELP IS WANTED

by the women who are ailing and suffering, or weak and exhausted. And, to every such woman, help is guaranteed by Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. For young girls just entering womanhood; women at the critical "change of life"; women approaching confinement; nursing mothers; and every woman who is "run-down" or overworked, it is a medicine that builds up, strengthens, and regulates, no matter what the condition of the system.

It's an invigorating, restorative tonic, a soothing and bracing nervine, and the only guaranteed remedy for "female complaints" and weaknesses. In bearing-down sensations, periodical pains, ulceration, inflammation, and every kindred ailment, if it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

The landsman tourist or commercial traveler, speedily begins, and not only begins, but continues, to feel the extreme of human misery during his transit across the tempestuous Atlantic. But if, with wise prescience, he has provided himself with a supply of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, his pangs are promptly mitigated, and then cease ere the good ship again drops her anchor. This is worth knowing, and thousands of our yachtsmen, summer voyagers, tourists and business men do know it.

DELANO DIARY

—If you want brick go to John Coolen's.

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

—We are infofmed that Otto Marr will start a branch store at Maple Plain soon.

—John Sturman is building an addition to his South River Street home. He is getting a nice place.

—The usual contingent of spring movers passed through town almost daily, mostly bound for the west.

--Mrs. McNoughton is haying an ell built onto her residence which adds much to the beauty of an already pretty residence.

—John Williams, of Independence, was in town yesterday on business connected with the securing of an addition to his Mexican Pension.

—The Mowatt store building is being raised to conform with its neighbor. Wyatt Johns will occupy it with confectionery and fruits.

—An ox-team, relic of bygone days was noticed on our streets on Wednesday. They are getting to be almost out of fashion now-a-days.

--We understand that Johnny Haffner took time on Wednesday to make a very important trip to the country with Charley Conzets race horse.

—Mr. Burns, of Carver county called on the GAZETTE yesterday. He is rustling for the Ginn & Co. school books, and claims to have sold all the districts of Carver and a part of Wright counties.

—The Waverly Band had been in town but a short time when a house that had stood the storms of many winters began to fall! When all the bands get a blowin' theres' no tellin, what will happen.

--On Tueseay morning the New York Aquarian Car Show appeared on the side track opposit the Danforth House and remained through the day. The Calliope gave a tune every half hour or so during the day.

—Town Clerk Wm. Kaspohl, now gets his mail at New Duluth. There will, most likely have to be a successor chosen to fill his unexpired term as we understand Mr. K. has got a job up north.

—Street Commissioner Stewart laid a nice crossing on Second Street yesterday near the GAZETTE office. What a pity it is not known to be on an established grade, so that it would not have to be pried up and fixed over by the next Street commissioner.

—If you are required in a few years to raise your houses and sidewalks in places and to lower them in other parts of town, blame the council that each year neglects to establish a grade which would cost less than the raising or lowering would, or of negl cting to go by the plat already made, Let us have a surveyor and establish a grade is the voice of most property owners, and complete a few of our streets so they will not need plowing up by every new council that comes into office.

—We understand Editor Buckley will leave three weeks from to-night on his trip to his native shores. His family will accompany him to Chicago when they will proceed to Indiana alone, to visit friends, until C. J. returns in September; at which time he intends taking full control of the Eagle, and making it a one headed bird once more, the present incumbent retiring from the editorial business. May fair winds and pleasant dreams accompany our neighbor on his long journey.

—Mr. Ole Erwig missed a silver watch and chain from his bed room a few days ago, and, after putting this and that together, concluded to tell a certain young man that he desired him to return it. Seeing the y. m. soon after he proceeded to make known his wishes, in language and manner calculated to impress the y. m. with the idea that the best thing for him to do would be to return the missing property at once. The young man took a short walk and soon returned with the missing watch which he delivered to its owner. The chain he denies having. Mr. E. talks of trying what effect an arrest would have. It might result in sending the y. m. to the Reform school.

—On Friday evening the Delano Cornet Band gave the first of their series of Friday evening open air concerts. The full band of 16 pieces was present and rendered some chance selections in good style. A large and with very few acceptions, appreciative audience lined the sidewalk for some distance on R. R. Ave., to get the full benefit. This is an evening when many from the country come to town to get their newspapers and can, also have a chance to be present at the fall open air concert. The bigger the crowd, if it is quiet, the better the boys can blow. Come in at 8 P. M. any Friday evening and enjoy the music and get your GAZETTE.

WHICH IS THE BEST.

When all the battles are lost and are won,
The last word spoken, the argument done,
Which, which is the best land under the sun?

The question is pondered by you and by me,
As our barks are sailing life's mystical sea,
But as to the answer we disagree.

"Oh, the very best land," says the German,
"Is mine!"
And his heart beats quick and his moist eyes shine
As he loudly sings, Die Wacht am Rhine.

But the Frenchman jeers at the German's praise,
While a tribute to France you hear him raise
In the fervent strains of the Marseillaise.

At the Frenchman's boasting the Scotchman cries:
"What land so bonny beneath the skies
As the land where the great Sir Walter lies?"

Then a Muscovite voice is heard to declare:
"Were my fellow creatures but wise and fair, They'd dote to a man on the Russian bear."

The Irishman answers with a scornful smile:
"Go over the universe, mile by mile,
And you'll find no land like the Emerald Isle,"

The Englishman comments in accents bland:
"I'm thinking there's only one civilized land,
And Britain's its name, you must understand."

The Yankee, rising, with deep emotion
Exclaims, "I'm firmly set in the notion
My eagle's the gem of the land or the ocean!"

So after the battles are lost and won,
The last words spoken, the argument done,
Which, which is the best land under the sun?

The question is pondered by you and by me,
As our barks are sailing life's mystical sea,
And, on second thinking, we all agree.

We are not divided, saving in name;
In essence each choice is really the same,
It springs from a common ineffable flame.

Whatever our race wherever we roam,
The spot that is dearest to each is home,
The toast drank deepest is "Home, sweet Home!"

—Toledo Blade.

County Cullings.

The Band Tournament is proving a success here to-day.

The Eagle says" All the 'tallent' visible in these two 'Buffalo papers' is a page or two of 'dead' advertisements kept in year after year to fill the aching void.' That's the kind of an eagle she is, familiary known, as the "Buzzard" and always with more "talons" for "dead" things than anything else.

After referring to Mr. Eaton's thrust about "visible editorial tallent" the Eagle says "By the way, a man who spells talent with two l's is out of sight." By this method of reasoning the Eagle editor must be deaf; for a man that would spell "calliope" with one "l" must be "out of hearing."

The Eagle a few weeks ago made mention that the Democrats had, already selected a man for the position of County Superintendent of schools that would be hard to beat, by any one the Republicans might pit against him. We are of opinion that there is available timber the Eagle has not yet dreamed of, for this position, whom the democrats will nominate and who will not be beaten at all.

The Great West contains an article from William Shenton' of Big Lake, from which we quote the following; "This Legislative district, last year at convention, voted against entangling the Alliance with the democrats. The vote being nine for fusion and twenty four against. I am happy to state that our Legislative district gained in the number of votes cast, and nearly all other districts in the state fell behind.

There is an undercurrent of thought abroad in our county and Legislative district and we dont just know but it may even extend over larger fields, that some of the would be leaders of political affairs are not just what they should be; that instead of working for the peace of mind, and harmony of their respective parties they are dickering and dealing with each other; with a view to dividing the spoils. That so they have a string to offices of trust and profit they care nothing about the occupants qualifications, reputation or general fitness, not even his political influence. So he can be handled to the liking of these would be shapers of governmental affairs is all they ask. This is all wrong and should be remedied by honest men making it a part of their business to attend every caucus, no matter how small and assist in putting proper persons in proper places.

The second International Reciprocity Convention meets in St. Paul, Minn., June 5th and 6th. Distiugnished speakers will be pesent from all parts of the United States and Canada. The Great Northern makes a round trip, of one fare between Delano and St. Paul. For futher paticulars see.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9,

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No, 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

A GOOD NAME.

Children choose it,
Don't refuse it;
'Tis a precious diadem:
Highly prize it,
Ne'er despise it,
You will need it when you're men.

Love and cherish,
Keep and nourish:
'Tis more precious far than gold:
Watch and guard it,
Don't discard it;
You will need it when you're old.

Then endeavor,
Now and ever—
Keep this blessed treasure nigh:
Never leave it,
Always own it
You will need it when you die.

Postmaster General Bissell is to be honored for refusing to remove B. H. Henderson, postmaster at Fayetteville, N. C., on the mere ground of color.—The Methodist Herald.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has expressed himself in favor of a session of Congress beginning not later than Sept. 15. to discuss, and improve on our present financial system.

THE MCKINLEY bill was to raise the price of wheat. And here we are, with 25cts. per bushel tariff on wheat, and the price about as cheap as it was at the time neighbor Gutzwiller drove them oxen with a load of produce to market and brought home his little red topped boots; and still there are those who are favoring the author of this "price raiser to farmers tariff bill" for Presidential nominee in 1896.! Isn't it about time we were removing the tariff restrictions from some other countries so that we may get rid of some of our wheat and have in exchange for it the products of their countries that are drugs in the market with them, and which we would be as glad to get, as they would to get our produce.

WHAT would people think of a man who would build a fine woollen mill and manufacture a large lot of blankets, cloths and flannels, and store up in the mill for the rats and mice to eat, and the moths to destroy, refusing to sell them to any one unless they lived in his own town, and at the same time himself and laborers suffering from hunger, having no flour, or meat or other eatables wherewith to appens their appetites, while all around them was plenty which they could easily get in exchange for their nice warm goods which their neighbors are so much in need of, to protect them from the cold, though having granaries of wheat, barns of cattle and other products of the country in abundance and to spare, but, for which there is no market, though so much needed by their neighbors in the village who refuse to exchange with them.

THE Reciprocity Convention held in St. Paul, this week was the second of its kind, and is pronounced a grand success, it passed a resolution favoring the removal of tariff restrictions upon our international trade so far as can be done consistently with a due regard to the revenue requirements of both countries, and claiming that this would be beneficial to both. The countries. This begins to look like business. It looks as if some of the people of Canada and the U. S, had begun to get your eyes open and to learn that there are other people, and other countries in the world besides their own. That is good as far as it goes. But there are yet other people and other countries that could profit by a removal of tariff restrictions and that would profit us as well. Take off all restrictions to trade that it is possible to take off. Let us trade with all the countries we can. Let us supply them with what our country can best spare and receive from them what our country most needs and all will flourish as God intended they hould.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 2. 1893.

Secretary Carlisle has made it a rule to see everybody that called on him at his office until this week, when after much deliberation he came to the conclusion that his promiscuous callers were taking up so much of the time that should be devoted to weightier matters that it was his duty to follow the President,s example and deny himself to general callers, and an announcement to that effect was made. It is easy enough to see Secretary Carlisle if your business is of a public nature, but otherwise you cannot. Theoretically it seems hard on some of his callers, but practically there was no other course left for him to take. In the present state of the country the official duties of the Secretary of the Treasury are of the highest importance, more depending directly upon him than upon any other member of the cabinet, and John Griffin Carlisle has never shirked or neglected his duty although he has often found it as he probably does in this case, more or less painful to perform.

Democrats were surprised when President Cleveland left Washington for a few days of rest and recreation at Hog Island, Va., without appointing a new Public printer, as the term of Mr. Palmer, the incumbent expired several weeks ago. Whether right or wrong the failure of any one of the score of applicants for this office to get the appointment is taken by many to mean that none of them will get it, but that it will eventually go to some man who has never made or probably ever thought of making an application for it. It has been rumored for several weeks that President Cleveland has been making quiet inquiries of some of his callers about various men who had been suggested to him for the place.

Commissioner of pensions Lochren has decided, after mature consideration, that to carry out his policy successfully in the Pension bureau he must have new chiefs in every division in the office, and the present chiefs, some of whom are notoriously inefficient, will all have to go. Some of them who have made fairly good records will be allowed to remain as clerks. Some of these chiefs, although they are republicans, have influential democrats trying to save their official heads, but Judge Lochren says he intends to put the office upon what he considers a strictly business basis and that no amount of influence will change his purpose.

That "inexperienced young man," Comptroller of Currency Eckels is very vigorously administering the business connected with his office. He says he intends to put a stop to national banks being used to bolster up outside wildcat financial schemes that would have no standing or credit whatever were it not for their supposed connection with national banks. Nobody knows better than Mr. Eckels that it is a big contract that he has undertaken. but if he succeeds he will certainly be a popular man with the solid business principals of the country, which are naturally opposed to the dummy mushroom financial concerns that always do so much to demoralize legitimate business. Mr Eckels emphasized his position on this question by telling Mr. E. A. Mears, the president of two N. Dakota banks that failed this week who called on him to say that he expected both banks would resume business, that the banks would not be permitted to resume, and further that no national bank with which he (Mears) was connected would be allowed to begin business hereafter.

How many of the republican papers which have been criticizing Secretary Carlisle for removing republican chiefs of division and asserting that their democratic successors were incompetent, will have the manliness to print his latest order, directing the examining board of the Treasury department to increase the minimum for testing the fitness of applicants for appointment as chiefs of division from 75 to 80 per cent?

Secretary Gresham has received no official comunication from the Chinese government giving even the slightest intimation of the intention of that government to adopt retaliatory measures towards Americans residing in China because of the Geary exclusion law, notwithstanding numerous more or less sensational statements to the contrary. The opportunity was too good for the sensation mongers to loose; hence the rumors.

As was generally expected, the Presbyterian General Assembly found Dr. Briggs guilty of heresy.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

The question of opening the World's Fair on Sunday, and the Chinese exclusion law seems to be in debate just now. In regard to Sunday opening think it would be better to throw the gates inside open and let the people go in, had better be there than attending the low dives and brothels of that modern Sodom.

Cant quite understand according to the constitution of the United States the Chinese exclusion law. The churches of this country, for years, have been raising funds and sending Missionaries to China to educate and christianize them. Has it not been a waste of time and money? Has their superstition, heathen philosophy and idol worships been broken up? We think not. Better give the money to the poor heathens at home.

The Memorial day at Maple Plain passed off very quiet. Was not so large a crowd as usual on that day. Many were home in the fields: others having lost the major part of their patriotism.

J. P. Pinkham, of Minneapolis, the wheel horse of the Prohibition party was orator of the day, and it seems there was not even strength enough in him to bring many of the leading Prohibitionists out, and yet every day they are shedding crocodile tears over the influential whiskey traffic, quite a number took exception to part of Mr. Pinkhams speach. For further particulars consult the principal Prohibitionists of Maple Plain and Armstrong.

The A. C. Campmeeting at Armstrong is now running on full time, with half a crew.

Rev. S. S. Hilscher of Delano Preached Memorial Sermon to G. A. R. Post, Maple Plain, last Sunday. Is a fine speaker for a man so young.

Farmers are about done planting corn.

Ben Pamiter of Rockford, was in Independence last Sunday.

Waren Alger of Ohio and C. I, Alger of Minneapolis, spent last Sunday in Independence.

THE Spanish infanta's full name is "Marie-Eulalie-Francoise-D'Assise-Marguerite-Roberte-Isabelle-Francoise de Paullie-Christine-Marie de la Piete." When Antoine, her husband, comes home from the lodge he repeats it instead of walking a crack to convince the infanta that the lemonade did not have any kindling wood in it.

SUICIDES are very frequent just now and increasing. Perhaps it might be well to adopt the German method. A few years ago when the suicide mania was strong it was enacted that the body of a suicide should be treated like that of a murderer and hanged and then be handed over to medical schools for dissection. This was a stopper to a very appreciable extent.

THIRTY and forty years ago no American actor was more popular or had more influence with the masses than the late James E. Murdoch. He added to the constituency of the theaters the wider constituency of the platform, and during the war no man used rare talent to better effect than did Mr. Murdoch in his readings for the benefit of sick and wounded soldiers.

IT was shown at the recent meeting of the fire underwriters in New York that since 1873 rewards for incendiaries have been offered aggregating $1,055,073, while 237 convictions for incendiarism have been obtained at a total expense of $57,581.94. A resolution was passed providing for a reward of $1,000 for each conviction in arson cases. This is a movement in the right direction.

PAUL GIBIER, manager of the Pasteur institute of New York, recently examined a quantity of European rags shipped to this country. He found 500,000,000 germs to each drachm of rags. Among them were microbes of pus, erysipelas, diphtheria and other diseases. There is something wrong somewhere when such pestilent debris from European disease centers can be dumped upon our shores.

THE old-time ballads "Old Folks at Home," "The Suwanee River" and "Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground" were composed by Stephen C. Foster, many of whose best songs were written on pieces of wrapping paper in the back room of a grocery in Pittsburgh, Pa. There are scores of these old-time popular songs. They were worn threadbare by their legions of admirers and are laid aside until succeeding generations shall recall them, though the war songs can never quicken again the blood of the singers as they did that of the generations to which they came as inspiration and a call to arms.

IRRIGATION has reclaimed 3,631,381 acres of arid land at a cost of $29,611,000. There are estimated to be 542,000,000 acres of arid and worthless land in the country capable of reclamation by irrigation. The value of irrigated land ranges from $31 in Wyoming to $150 per acre in California. The annual value of the irrigated product varies from $8.25 in Wyoming to $19 in California. The average first cost of bringing the water to the arid land is $8.25, and the subsequent cost is $1.07 a year, the water right thus created being valued at $26 per acre. Irrigation in this country has a large future.

AFTER THEIR CASH.

Uneasy Depositors Make Things Lively for Several Chicago Banks—Heavy Runs Experienced, But All Demands Are Met, Only One Suspension Being Announced.

CHICAGO, June 6.—The opening of the banks in Chicago was characterized by strong symptoms of a panic. Much uneasiness existed since Saturday, and the doubts and fears among depositors had become so far augmented, even long before 10 o'clock, that crowds, including men and women and working girls, found their way to the bank doors and were ready to improve the first possible opportunity to withdraw what money they had on deposit. As the day wore on the crowds increased, and by noon a full-fledged panic of no mean magnitude was inaugurated.

Savings banks which experienced a run Monday kept their tellers at work until all who had been in line up to the hour of ordinary closing were paid, and notices were posted on the doors that the banks would be open for business at the regular hour this morning.

The panic did not extend beyond the owners of small savings accounts, but there was an intense strain in financial affairs. It is to the rumor mongers that the day is indebted for its worst phase. They succeeded in frightening many people. Instead of the dozen disasters that were talked about there is found to be but one suspension that would in ordinary times excite no especial comment or occasion serious trouble. Some of the banks that had runs did in a few cases take advantage of the sixty-day limit. But there was no occasion for the loss of confidence displayed by their patrons.

CHICAGO, June 6.—The private banking house of Meadowcroft Bros., 100 Washington street, at the northeast corner of Washington and Dearborn streets, has been placed in the hands of a receiver, being forced to suspend because of the prevailing monetary stringency. Lyman E. Crandall has been appointed receiver. Eddy & Walker, attorneys for the firm, have given an approximate estimate of the bank's assets and liabilities. They place the liabilities at $250,000, and the assets at $460,000.

The depositors began a run on the Illinois Trust and Savings bank in the Rookery building early in the morning and clamored for their money all day long. The bank made every effort to pay promptly and the officials expressed no fear for the result of the demand for deposits.

This bank kept its doors open until after midnight in order that everyone who wanted his money might have it. The last depositor in the line got his money at 3 a. m., then the bank closed until 10 o'clock.

Shortly after the doors of the Bank of Commerce were opened a run was started which continued for hours. President Felsenthal says rumors are responsible for the run; the bank was conducted on soundest financial principles, its officers do not speculate, and there was plenty of cash in its vaults to meet all demands.

There was a heavy run upon the Prairie State national bank and the Prairie State Savings and Trust company all day. The bank officials appear to take the matter easily and met all the demands made upon them.

In the general excitement that struck the public the Hibernian bank did not escape, but the result thus far is not alarming to the officials.

Meadowcroft Brothers' failure precipitated a run on the Dime savings bank at 104 Washington street. But here, as at the Bank of Commerce, the run was made chiefly by the small depositors and there was really more excitement on the sidewalk than inside the bank. Officials claim to be in a position to meet all demands.

A run was made on the Union Trust bank, of which Stephen W. Rawson is president. The run began about noon and was kept up during the afternoon.

At the Globe savings bank the run kept up all day. At 2 p. m. it was decided to take advantage of the thirty-day notice provided for savings accounts. Vice President Hayes said this would not have been done had the run been on that bank alone.

There was a slight run at the Milwaukee avenue state bank, but the crowds began to diminish by the close of the business day.

It was a wild day on the board of trade. The uneasy feeling in the financial world invaded the speculators in grains and provisions and caused a temporary panic. Prices tumbled headlong. The bears could not trade fast enough to keep up with the reducing market. July wheat sold down to 65¾, a drop of nearly 3 cents. Cash wheat declined 2 cents and reached a figure lower than it has sold in the last thirty years. Intense excitement prevailed.

All deliveries of grain and provisions suffered in a similar manner. September was not quite as radical as July. It opened at 72¼, reached 70 and closed at 70½, while corn and oats were off from a cent to a cent and a half. Pork was a very sick commodity, and declined over a dollar a barrel, with hogs off from 40 to 60 cents.

All told, the day was a disastrous one and even the alarmists did not care to exaggerate the feeling of unrest. The market has been weak and its nerves all on edge. It has only needed the slightest pretext to pull prices down about the ears of speculators.

They were taken from the palace while the count and countess of Flanders were attending a court ball.

Miss Lizzie Borden Placed on Trial—She Is Charged with the Murder of Her Father and Stepmother.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., June 6.—The trial of Miss Lizzie A. Borden, charged with the murder of her father and stepmother, August 4, 1892, was begun at 11 a. m. Monday. After nine hours of rigid examination a jury was secured. The defendant was arraigned and pleaded not guilty. She manifested a coolness that approached indifference to the proceedings.

[The double murder of Andrew J. Borden and his wife took place in this city shortly before noon on August 4, 1892. The body of the old gentleman was found on a sofa in the parlor of the house and that of Mrs. Borden in a bed chamber on the second floor. Death in both cases had been caused by repeated blows of some heavy, sharp instrument on the face, neck and head. Although Mr. Borden was worth half a million dollars, there is no evidence to indicate that robbery had been the motive of the crime. No plate or money or any of the valuables of the mansion were messing, nor had a single thing been removed from the bodies.

There were, so far as is yet known, but two persons besides Borden and his wife on the premises when the murder was committed. These were Bridget Sullivan, a domestic, and Lizzie Borden, the younger of Mr. Borden's two daughters. The first alarm was given by Lizzie, who ran out into the yard and called for help. She was suspected chiefly because of certain discrepancies between her statements to the police as to the circumstances under which the bodies were found. A brother-in-law of Borden named Harrington also testified that for ten years there had been almost constant disputes between the daughters and Mr. and Mrs. Borden. They had been allowed $250 a year each, and had been given property worth in the aggregate about $6,000. They were dissatisfied with this, Harrington said, and thought they ought to have more. Miss Borden moved in the best society, and wanted money to "hold her end up," as Harrington expressed it.

The theory of the prosecution is that it was the purpose of Lizzie Borden, by killing Border and his wife, to inherit one-half of the estate. Bearing on this point information was furnished the police to the effect that Mr. Borden was about to make a will. The police consider the information reliable. No will has been found since his death and he is believed to have died intestate. It is said that Lizzie Borden knew he was about to make a will. Before the tragedy Lizzie Borden lived the humdrum life of a small place. She once taught a Sunday school class and was bright but sedate. She made an extended tour of Europe two or three years ago.]

THE PRESIDENT TALKS.

He Will Call Congress to Meet in Special Session Next September—Important Declarations on the Financial Question.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—The president said Monday evening in reply to a direct question that he intended to call an extra session of congress not earlier than the 1st nor later than the 15th of September, unless unexpected contingencies should necessitate an earlier meeting. The president further said:

"While there has been no mystery or secrecy in regard to my intention in this matter I think it not amiss that our people should be informed authoritatively that the time is at hand when their representatives in congress will be called upon to deal with a financial condition which is the only menace to the country's welfare and prosperity. It is well for the people to take up the subject for themselves, and arrive at their conclusions as to the merits of a financial policy which obliges up to purchase idle silver bullion with gold taken from our reserve.

"One does not need the eye of a financier to see that this gold thus substracted from the government's stock is eagerly seized by other nations for the purpose of strengthening their credit at our expense. It does not need the art of statesmanship to detect the danger that awaits upon the continnance of this operation. Already the timidity of capital is painfully apparent, and none of us can fail to see that fear and apprehension in monetary circles will ultimately bring suffering to every humble home in our land.

"I think that between now and the meeting of congress much depends upon the action of those engaged in financial operations and business enterprises. Our vast national resources and credit are abundantly sufficient to justify them in the utmost faith and confidence. If instead of being frightened they are conservative, and if instead of gloomily anticipating immediate disaster they contribute their share of hope and steadiness, they will perform a patriotic duty and at the same time protect their own interest. The things just now needed are coolness and calmness in financial circles and study and reflection among our people."

TRAGEDY IN ILLINOIS.

A Citizen of Braceville Kills His Wife and Himself While Insane.

BRACEVILLE, Ill., June 6.—Early on Sunday evening, in the western part of Braceville, in a small house, a sight was discovered which made the hardest hearted turn away sick and horrified. Seraphim De Medlan, a Belgian and a miner, and his wife were the subjects. The wife was lying across the bed dead, with a great gaping wound from a shotgun in her right breast, while a babe, not over 4 months old, was at her breast as if just taken from a crib near by. On the opposite side of the room lay De Medlan with his brains blown out by the same instrument of death, which was found lying beside him. The first to come upon this horrible scene was a boy 12 years old, son of Mrs. De Medlan, who had been working in a field near by and came to the house for supper. He gave the alarm to neighbors, and soon the house and yard were filled with incomers. Nothing but circumstantial evidence could be obtained, but everything pointed to the fact that De Medlan first shot his wife and then, to escape the punishment of the law, took his own life.

De Medlan was thought to be partially insane for some time before the crime, but no violence was made known to anyone in town until Sunday night, when the boy stated that some time ago his stepfather had said that he would some time shoot his wife and then kill himself. Coroner Ferguson was called, but the jury were unable to determine anything beyond the mere fact that both were killed and that the murderer and suicide was De Medlan.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Lost $1,400.

Louis Grant, a prominent farmer of Elizabeth, Minn., was garotted and robbed of $1,400 on the lake front in Chicago. He went there to see the fair and met two confidence men while walking on the lake front in the evening. They took some drinks and after several rounds the trio went out and sat on one of the benches. One of the confidence men, seeming to know the topography of the neighborhood where Grant lived, induced him to believe he had found two old friends from his home. About 11 o'clock he arose to go to his hotel, when one of the men clutched him by the throat, shutting off his wind, and then went through his pockets. He was then knocked down and beaten into insensibility, the robbers making good their escape.

A Dead Man.

The body of a dead man was discovered within 100 feet and directly in front of the dwelling of W. G. Moore, who resides on the outskirts of La Prairie. Moore immediately notified the village marshal, who wired the coroner at Grand Rapids. The body was badly decomposed and every appearance indicates that the man had frozen to death last winter whilst in a drunken stupor. Two bottles of liquor were sticking out of his pockets. His feet were covered with moccasins, but otherwise he had not the dress of an ordinary woodsman.

Work of an Insane Man.

Several of the school houses in Kandiyohi county have been entered during the night and both teachers' and pupils' books burned. The loss in each case was from $15 to $25. The books, including the pulpit bible, were taken from the Lutheran church at Green Lake and burned. Several wooden crosses were taken from the graves and piled on the burning books. The depredations extended in a southwesterly direction across the county. It is now thought to be the work of an insane person.

Indicates Suicide.

The coroner and sheriff of Anoka were called to Coon Creek to investigate the death of George Glison, who was found lying dead in a meadow about half a mile from the house. He had gone out to plant corn in the morning, and his wife, happening to go out, found him. The jury decided that arsenic administered by his own hand was the cause of death. Appearances showed that a terrible struggle took place when he was dying. Everyone is puzzled as to the cause of the act.

A MAY-DAY MORALITY.

JUSTIN H. M'CARTHY

[Copyright, 1893, by the Author.]

I WAS in a very ill humor. With my morning post had come amongst others one particular catalogue—the catalogue of a very famous bookseller—and it contained in its list a great many items that I particularly wished to have. But when I had marked them off with my pencil, and finally went over them and added up their total, I was annoyed at the sum they represented. I felt that I could not afford them, that I ought not to afford them, and in consequence I felt horribly ill-used, and that the world was a bad world, which suffered so many millionaires to exist while I, the student of languages, the lover of linguistics, could not afford to buy the few miserable books which I so ardently longed for.

As I sat in this sullen mood I heard a great noise and shouting and the sound of clashing instruments rising from the street. On looking out I perceived the cause of the unwonted tumult. Opposite to my quiet lodgings there is a large stable-yard, which is cut off from the road by a high yellow wall, pierced in the center by a lofty, Roman-looking, red arch, which towers above the wall and affords the only entrance into the court. This court, usually the undisturbed domain of grooms and ostlers, of horses and hay carts, was now in possession of a motley and garish crowd. It was a crowd of May mummers, pranked out in clean splendor and busily occupied in making those noises which had first attracted my attention. I remembered that it was the first of May, and I began to feel the interest that a student of Folk-lore always feels in any survival of old-time customs. The girls, who were in the majority in the little band, glittered in the cheap finery of pink and blue print dresses. All the members of the merry fellowship bore on their heads gaudy wreaths of paper flowers with many-colored streamers, and in their hands they brandished clattering tambourines or flourished painted striped sticks, which they rattled against the ground, and so swelled the din. They were shouting and rushing about the court as if possesed of some midsummer madness, and their movements lent an unusually gay air to the somewhat somber courtyard.

Round the archway a fringe of dully-clad humanity had halted—passers-by, postmen, loafers of many kinds. From windows round about servants thrust out their capped heads, and doors opening in all directions off the yard disclosed the stablemen smiling in good-humored amazement upon the merrymakers. In a little while the revelers whirled out into the street, shouting and shaking their sticks and tambourines, their streamers floating and their childish voices shrilling loud in glee. The gaping knot of idlers huddled together and moved slowly after them, gazing with a surprise which had in it something of the true town mockery for anything odd and bright and pleasant. Yet, it seemed to me, looking down from my window, there was something almost like awe, too, in the minds of those hangers-on at the fantastic gladsomeness of the little creatures.

I decided, as I watched, that there was something pleasingly Pagan about the whole scene. It was like some old Roman rustic festival thrust suddenly into the gloom of a London street. It might almost be some procession of lads and lasses singing and dancing for very lightness of heart in honor of Ceres or Pales, or the god of the gardens. Surely these flower-bound dancers are about to welcome the Kalends of May with crackling sulphur and salt, and flour sprinkled upon the altar flame of the Lares, and to burn laurels before the little statues of the gods.

Of course I knew well enough, though it pleased me to indulge in these learned reflections, that the troop were but some poor children of the neighborhood, who had crept out of small houses in small streets to shine for a season in coats of many colors. They had put on their paper crowns in obedience to an almost forgotten custom, not without a hope of picking up a few pennies from the benevolent. Yet, for the life of me, I could not shake off the fancy that they were thus skipping and shouting and footing it in the service of Flora, the fairest companion of the painted seasons.

I was rapidly brought back to realities. A solemn gentleman, arrayed with that elaborate discomfort in which British respectability delights, entered the street and shattered my Roman vision. One diminutive damsel of the band separated herself from the rest and ran along by his side, holding out her tambourine and soliciting a gift. The man was untouched by the appeal. He was afraid perhaps that he would look ridiculous if he suffered himself to be led into any dealings with the oddly-clad votaries of foreign gods. So he hurried away from the flaunting folly.

Perhaps he was right, after all, I thought, as the man of to-day turned the corner. Perhaps there would have been something inappropriate in presenting an English sixpence to so Ovidian a maiden. Only some such small coin as the Romans gave for good luck with the first flush of the new Year could rightly have contented her—some coin perhaps with double-headed Janus on the one side and the ship of scythe-bearing Saturn on the other.

The dancers disappeared. The barbaric noises grew fainter. The merry pageant was fading away from sight and hearing. "I will know these maskers nearer," I said to myself, "learn whether they are indeed the shapes of an antique world or but the sons and daughters of London slums." I hurried into the streets but my mummers had disappeared. I turned down one street. No sign of them there. I tried another and another, all with no better luck. The earth has bubbles as the water has, and these seemed to be of them. My ear could catch no distant echo of their joyous charivari.

Suddenly, just as I was about to turn back again to my lodgings I got a glimpse of color in a dingy doorway. I drew nearer. It was one of the mummers; it was the little impish girl who had so greatly entertained me. She was deep down in the doorway—it was, as I remember, the doorway of a land agent's office, and seemed to be but rarely visited. The little maid had her back turned to me and was slowly counting over a small quantity of small coins, her gains apparently from her Maytime mummery. She was so occupied with her task that when I got near to her she did not notice my coming and I was looking over her shoulder before she became conscious of my presence and turned with a little start.

"What are you going to do with all that money?" I said to her, with a smile that I intended to be reassuring. Apparently it was reassuring, for the little lass, who had at first clenched up her coppers in her little fists and put her fists behind her back, now brought them forward again and smiled back at me as she unfolded her small and rather dirty palms, and displayed the wealth they contained.

It was not much wealth after all. I think it came to about five pence halfpenny all told, but it was evident to me that the little girl regarded it as a very serious property.

"Well," I said, "won't you tell me what you are going to do with all that money? Come, let me contribute something," and I laid a sixpence on top of the pile of hot halfpence in her right hand.

The little girl's face flushed with pleasure while she thanked me, which she did with a certain gravity that is occasionally to be met with among the children of the extremely poor. I could see that she now regarded me worthy of confidence. With the gravity of a small chancellor of the exchequer she proceeded to unfold to me the scheme of her little budget. The sudden introduction of an element of silver into the bronze had not upset, it had only enlarged, her financial calculations.

It appeared that mother was a washerwoman, and twopence out of the sum was to be laid out in the purchase of bloaters for mother, a deliacy, it appeared, of which the good woman was fond. Then there was a little brother who was not as strong as he might be, and upon him a penny was to be laid out—at least that was the original purpose—in the most elaborate way. For he was to have a farthing story book, and a farthing cake, and a farthing stick of sweetstuff, and a farthing apple. My unforseen liberality had slightly expanded the possibilities and he was to have a halfpenny-worth of each of these pleasures for mind and body.

So the little maid ran on. Twopence was to go into mother's money box, a whole penny was to be devoted to buying a bunch of flowers for the girl in the court who had so much sewing to do, and who loved flowers so dearly. I forget exactly all the details of the little creature's scheme, but they were all informed by the same unaffected spirit of benevolence.

When she had come to an end I asked her a question: "But what are you going to get for yourself?"

She did not at first quite seem to understand my meaning, and she re-enumerated most of her purposes. When she had finished I repeated my question. This time she understood me and she shook her little head till the paper crown rustled.

"I don't want nothing," she said; "I've got all I want, Mother 'll give me a bit of her bloater, and I know Bobb 'll want me to take a bite of his apple."

I do not know that I ever entertain a very high opinion of my own merits, but I do not think that I ever seemed smaller in my own regard than I seemed at that moment. My querulousness, my grumbling, seemed so woefully petty, so selfish, when contrasted with the simple generosity of this little daughter of the gutter.

"I beg your pardon," I said to her, in very earnest apology.

She stared at me in astonishment. I could see that she was very eager to be off and make her little purchases, but that a sense of politeness to an unexpected friend refrained her impatience. So I asked her where her mother lived. She told me. It was a dismal place enough, in the purlieus of Westminster. I gravely promised that I would go and see her mother and make Bobby's acquaintance—I am glad to think that I kept my promise, but that is neither here nor there—and then I let the little maid go her ways. She went speeding away up the street, once more a brightly-colored dancing imp, and I paced slowly back to my lodging.

"There," I said to myself, "is a lesson for you, and a lucky one. For it was a mere chance—or was it a mere chance?—that made you run up against that dingy little fairy. If that child had been, as she very well might have been, a selfish little beast, occupied only by the thought of what she could do for herself out of her little takings, you would have been confirmed in your own squalid, sordid thoughts; you would have felt convinced that the world was evil, all grasping, all greedy, and that the kindlier emotions, the soft charities and loves were but the sick fancies of the penny philosopher. Well, if it was only a chance, I am grateful for it with all my heart. Do I not recall certain words: "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings?"

When I got home I am proud to say that I put the catalogue into the waste-paper basket without a sigh.

Proper Pride.

He—Wasn't that the countess of Mohair that just went by? I thought you told me she was a friend of yours?

She—Oh, we meet occasionally, and all that, but I've really been obliged to drop Lady Mohair, I'm sorry to say.

He—Dear me—really! What for?

She—Oh, well, she always deliberately turns her back on me when I try to speak to her, and looks another way when I bow, or else coolly stares me in the face and takes no notice whatever; so now I make a point of cutting her dead.—London Punch.

THE WOMEN OF VIENNA.

They Are Noted for Their Beauty and Good Nature.

The Orient and the Occident are most charmingly mingled in the Viennese woman, who may be described as a mixture of both. While she has all the sterling moral qualities, the common sense and high standard of intelligence of the west, her physical charms partake more of those of the east. Her figure is more full than that of the Parisienne, or of the latter's counterpart, the New York girl, and is built on lines that may be described as voluptuous. Although frequently the blondest of the blondes, her form is that of one of the houris of the Orient, where small, artificially-compressed waists are unknown and where nature is permitted to have free sway with the figure. It is to the Orient, too, that the Viennese is probably indebted for her love of bright colors, which, though vivid, are invariably harmonious, picturesque and becoming when worn by her. Still another Oriental characteristic which we find very strongly developed in the Viennese girl is her passionate love for music and for dancing. People sing, play and dance at Vienna as nowhere else in the world, save perhaps among the Gitanas at Seville or the Tsiganes at Moscow; and, indeed, so thoroughly does the musical and rhythmical instinct seem inborn in them that one would almost be tempted to believe that, notwithstanding their blonde hair and fair complexion, they have in their veins a strain of gypsy blood. In the west music as a rule comes to us by education, and with rare exceptions we are entirely wanting in what may be described as the sacred fire of harmony. The Viennese, however, seem to possess the gift as a birthright, and they need no instruction to produce the most entrancing melody. Let anyone who doubts this get some French, German, English or American virtuoso to play a waltz of Strauss on the piano. While the execution may be perfect, yet it will leave the listener cold and unmoved. But let an ordinary Viennese player, a man of the humblest classes—let us say a journeyman tailor, a hack-driver or a waiter—play identically the same piece on either piano-forte or on the zither, the blood will begin to course more quickly through our veins, there will come a sort of delightful, yet inexpressible cold shiver down the small of the back, and unconsciously we find ourselves keeping time both with voice and feet.

This being the case, dancing of course plays a great role in the life of the Viennese. It did so in 1815, when the Prince de Ligne wrote: "The congress dances, but does not make any progress with its work." Everybody dances at Vienna, young and old, rich and poor, the high-born and those of the humbler birth; and so passionately fond are the people of this form of entertainment that one almost feels convinced that they picture to themselves Heaven in the shape of some grand carnival-time ball, where lovely angels will perpetually float around through the air with archangels as partners to the strains of Strauss' waltzes, played by celestial performers. But to no one, perhaps, does dancing constitute so important a feature in life as to the Viennese maiden. If she belongs to the aristocracy, no matter whether she is princess, baroness, or merely entitled to the nobiliary particle of "von," she is designated until her marriage as a "contessel," which may be translated as "little countess," and the "contessel" has all sorts of prerogatives in connection with dancing that are accorded to her by tradition. Thus at nearly all the balls that are given by the great world there is a special room set for them which is known as the "contessel salon," and which belongs exclusively to them and their partners. There they dance and flirt unhampered by the presence of any chaperon; and the married woman no matter how young a bride, who ventures to cross the threshold and to invade their domain would be regarded as an intruder and guilty of a breach of good form and etiquette. At the supper which follows a certain number of tables are set aside for the exclusive use of the "contessel" and of their partners, and woe betide the married woman who tries to obtain room. Unlike Paris, London, and New York, where it is the young married woman who is the queen of the ball, at Vienna it is the young girl of the "contessel who reign supreme there, and who carries everything before her.

This latitude allowed to the young girl and this freedom of chaperonage would not be possible were it not for the fact that the great world at Vienna is a sort of big family, and very close corporation, where nearly all are related to one another, and from which strangers and foreigners, except when related to noble houses in Austria, are pitilessly excluded. Blue blood, untarnished by any plebeian strain, through six or seven generations of ancestry, are indispensable to those who would belong thereto; and no new rank, no matter how great, conferred by the sovereign can win for the bearer admission to the charmed circle. The result is that there is no fear of strangers who might be inclined to take undue advantage of the familiarity and unconventionality that prevail. Every one calls every one else by the Christian names, and addresses each other as "Thou." Married women and young girls have no compunction about honoring the men present, all more or less closely related to them, with honest, hearty handshakes that would cause the hair of a dame of the haute bourgeoisie of London or Paris to rise in horror from her head were she to witness it, and above all there is no pretense and no affectation. All are intimately acquainted with one another's affairs, antecedents, family, and fortunes that pretense would be superfluous, and it is impossible to describe the charm this freedom from all artificiality, snobbery, and hollow affectation imparts to Viennese society.—N. Y. Tribune.

A Society Episode.

"I want somebody to show me where to unload this coal," said the grimy-looking man at the kitchen door.

"You needn't ask me about it," retorted the young woman. "I don't have anything to do with unloading coal. I'm the kitchen lady."

"I can't help that," he rejoined. "I'm the coal gentleman and the father of three kitchen ladies, one laundry lady and one cash lady, and if you don't show me where to put this coal I'll call the woman of the house."

"I—I'll show you, sir," she humbly replied, leading the way to the coal-house.—Chicago Tribune.

GYMNASTICS FOR THE LUNGS.

Artificial Breathing Which May Benefit Health and Prolong Life.

Air is to the lungs what food is to the stomach. Its importance may be judged from the fact that a healthy human being requires sixty-six gallons of air per hour. The lungs consist of 1,800,000,000 lung cells, which, if they were spread out, would cover two hundred square meters. This proves the usefulness of the lungs. We must breathe, and if we do not instinctively understand how to do it properly we should learn. Hence lung gymnastics. But few breathe properly. Look at the children over their lessons or the accountant over his books. Can you hear them breathe? Nay, they do it so feebly that it does not affect their position or countenance. To breathe correctly is an art, and must be learned, though nature ought to have given every one the faculty. In the first place it is wrong to draw the breath through the mouth. The nose is the natural avenue to the lungs. In the nose are provided cavities in which the air is warmed before it comes to the lungs. The nose also contains excretions which absorb the impurities of the air. We all commit a great fault by not breathing with force. To understand what a true forceful breath is, bare the breast and look into your glass. The ordinary breathing scarcely moves the chest; but hold the breath for an instant before it is blown out and you will see the chest move. This is right. We must breathe so forcefully that the chest moves up and down, or visibly expands and contracts.

"Artificial" breathing consists in forcing the air in and out of the lungs so strongly that the chest visibly expands and contracts. To learn to practice that it is well in the beginning to stand up straight against a wall, for instance, placing the heels together, resting the arms upon the hips; then push the chest forward, while the abdomen is contracted, so much that the weight of the person falls upon the foremost part of the feet. After having come into this position close the mouth and draw in the air slowly and blow it out as slowly. After a long or deep breath one ought to hold that breath for an instant before it is blown out again. By holding the breath the air comes to act on whole surface of the blood, nourishing it and removing the impure gases. The lungs must be perfectly emptied before being refilled, and that can only be done by forceful breathing. When we make those experiments the body must not be tied down by close-fitting garments, bonds or an overloaded stomach. The best time is in the morning and before meals. The exercise should always be taken in free, fresh and pure air, or at least before an open window. Five minutes' exercise every day will do wonders for a healthy person. We must not expect miracles for unhealthy persons from lung gymnastics. We ought to practice before we get sick. Sometimes the practice would prevent the sickness. At at rate, it will prolong life.—N. Y. Weekly.

POWER OF TELESCOPES.

Comparative Figures Showing the Weakness of the Human Eye.

The following careful statement by Prof. E. S. Holden on the power of the eye and the telescope, as they are contrasted in actual experience, is of special and permanent interest: If the brightness of a star seen with the eye alone is one, with a two-inch telescope it is 100 times as bright; with a four-inch telescope it is 400 times as bright; eight-inch telescope it is 1,600 times as bright; sixteen-inch telescope it is 6,400 times as bright: 32-inch telescope it is 25,600 times as bright; 36-inch telescope it is 32,400 times as bright. That is, stars can be seen with the 36-inch telescope which are 30,000 times fainter than the faintest stars visible to the naked eye. While the magnifying power which can be successfully used on the 5-inch telescope is not above 400, the 36-inch telescope will permit a magnifying power of more than 2,000 diameters on suitable objects, stars for example. This power cannot be used on the moon and planets with real advantage for many reasons, but probably a power of 1,000 or 1,500 will be the maximum. The moon will thus appear under the same conditions as if it were to be viewed by the naked eye at a distance of, say 200 miles. This is the same as saying that objects about 300 feet square can be recognized, so that no village or great canal or even a large edifice can be built on the moon without our knowledge. Highly organized life on the moon will make itself known in this indirect way if it exists. If one were looking at the earth under the same conditions, the great work of hydraulic mining, or the great operations of Dakota farms or California ranches would be obvious.—Chicago Herald.

Not Proud of His Election.

There is a case on record in Japan where the winner at the polls was not only sorry for his success, but came through that success subsequently to wish that he had never been born. This was in the village of Awa, and the person honored—or dishonored—by the majority vote was a Jap by the name of Abi Tanihei. It seems that the village of Awa was harassed by a midnight robber whom nobody could detect. The head of the hamlet summoned the entire male population under his charge and directed every man to write the name of the person whom he suspected and to deposit the paper in a box. Fifteen ballots bore the name of Abi Tanihei, the rest being blanks. The man whom everybody distrusted was so much overcome with astonishment he made a full confession and went to prison. In a more civilized country an incident of this sort could never happen, and it is to be hoped that it will never be tried. If Abi Tanihei had really been an honest man it would have made no difference in his fate, which would indeed have been a dreadful thing.—Harper's Young People.

Early Make of Artificial Eyes.

The earliest notice of artificial eyes I am acquainted with occurs in a very rare work by the French surgeon, Ambroise Pare, entitled "La Methode Curative des Playes et Fractures de la Teste Humaine," Paris, 1561. At page 226 Pare gives a description and figures of artificial eyes, to be worn in cases where the eyeball has given way and all the humors have escaped. They are to be segments of a hollow sphere, made of gold, coated with enamel painted in natural colors. With the exception of the gold, they are exactly like the eyes in use at the present time, which are made wholly of glass.—Notes and Queries.

A Matter of Health

IT costs more to make Royal Baking Powder than any other, because its ingredients are more highly refined and expensive. But the Royal is correspondingly purer and higher in leavening strength, and of greater money value to the consumer. The difference in cost of Royal over the best of the others does not equal the difference in leavening strength, nor make good the inferior work of the cheaper powders, nor remove the impurities which such powders leave in the food.

Where the finest food is required, the Royal Baking Powder only can be used.

is a brilliant and beautiful summer number. It opens with a quaint and delightful Shakspercan pastoral, "Will O' Stratford," by Anna Robeson Brown, charmingly illustrated by Cox. Kate Rohrer Cain's illustrated poem, "The Men in Lincoln Green," is almost a pendant to this English idyl. Marietta Ambrosi tells how Spanish children play at bull-fighting; Susan Coolidge has a stirring poem of the Danish heromyth, "Holger Danske;" Elton Craig has a marvel-story, "The Wizard's Palace;" Louise Coffin Jones gives a timely sketch of her thrilling experiences as a "Schoolma'am in Hawaii;" Captain Julius A. Palmer gives in Wide Awake Athletics certain valuable "Hints for Yachtsmen;" Oscar Fay Adams contributes as the first of his illustrated series on "Our English Homes," a paper on Worcester; Richmond O. as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

DELANO DIARY

—If you want brick go to John Coolen's.

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

—Rev. Davies preached a good sermon Sabbath, evening from Heb-4-15.

—The funeral of Mrs. F. F. Chancellor was held from the M. E. Church on Saturday, the remains was interred in the Rader Cemetery.

—Read John Belden's notice to School Board's and see what he has to say. We believe Mr. Belden to be a good straight man to do business with.

—It didn't look well to the people present in town on Saturday to see one of the councilmen assisting in law breaking by helping distribute free beer.

—The engines and depots along the line of the G. N. Railroad were decorated with flags and a celebration held in honor of the completion of the road to the Pacific coast.

—We are informed that Mrs. F. H. Halgren is temporary Matron at the Soldiers Home at Hot Springs, S. D. where she went to visit her father who is sick there.

—If a few of the streets and alleys in town were graded, and a place made for the water to run off on each side it would materially aid in keeping them clean. And they could be kept in good condition for travel.

—Freight trains run only every other day now, consequently when one comes in it brings two days accumulation of freight and makes the platform at the depot look something like an old fashioned steamboat landing.

—The fire aparatus in town should be thoroughly overhauled and tested, so that in case of fire, which might prove disastrous to the village, on some of the dry windy days of Summer, it could be promptly brought into play for all it was worth.

—The twelfth annual re-union of the ex-soldiers and Sailors Union of Carver county will be held at Watertown, Friday, and Saturday June 16 and 17. These reunions have previously proved to be interesting and doubtless will be this year.

—Geo. P. Shaffer. visited St. Paul on business and pleasure, on Wednesday. He reports the parade and celebration in honor of the completion of the G. N. Railroad as a grand affair and thinks he has picked up many pointers that can be utilized in the coming 4th of July celebration.

—Some or our citizens say the village council should appropriate a hundred or two dollars for the 4th of July celebration. Legal authorities, so far as heard from agree that they have no business to appropriate anything for any days celebration. If it becomes the custom to give a hundred dollars or so for every holiday, it may be a long time before our $1000 bond is paid.

—Our village has become noted for its good 4th of July Celebrations. It is proposed to endeavor to keep up our reputation this year. Let all go in to make it so. There are many people in the village and vicinity who can not well, drive away very far and unless we have on entertainment at home the day is apt to be dry for many. Usually quite a number from the cities take this opportunity to visit friends here and enjoy the day with them. Let us have a good celebration at home.

—The distribution of free beer at the Band Tournament last Saturday by one of our fellow townsmen was an act not generally approved of, by our citizens, nor by those present from abroad. It was in open violation to the law and subject to a fine of from $50 to $100 together with the cost of the prosecution and by imprisonment in the county jail not less than 30 days nor more than 90 days! If people wish to do business they must keep within the law, or, sooner or later, public sentiment will so condemn the business that it will be closed up. There is in town six licensed saloons where beer can be had. These saloon keepers pay into the village Treasury $500 each annually, for the privelege of selling beer, and other liquors. It is a wonder then that they will sit and see a man drive openly into the street and supply the crowd in defiance of the law. There are temperence people who talk about the laws not being strong enough. Why if the penalty instead of imprisonment and fining was fixed at hanging it would be no stronger if people looked calmly on and allowed such things to occur without complaint A good many of the crowd who assisted in emptying the bottles in the presence of the ladies and children looked, and acted, as if they would have much rather had the screens up than to be seen guzzling from a bottle before the public gaze. This kind of thing is too old fashioned, altogether, and so far as we have heard, the beer was furnished by one man and we think after learning the penalty he nor others will care to lay themselves liable by a reputition of the act.

—If you need lime, call on John Coolen. 27.

—Cyrus Chapman is haying his new third street residence painted.

—Messrs. Haynes and Mattison of Rockford are painting I. C. Stewart's new residence.

—We are in receipt of the 21st Horticultural report of the State. It is a neatly gotten up volume and contain's some valuable pointers to fruit raisers in Minnesota.

—Simon Weldelee's River Street residence now has the tower in place and begins to assume the city airs. We presume Simon will conlinue to recognize old friends all the same.

—Theodore Strauch, on the Montrose road has a crew of men at work on a fine barn 30 x 60 feet. Nothing is better for a farmer to have on his place than ample barn room. A place to keep every thing comfortable and out of storms.

—Mrs. Graves, of Wisconsin who is stopping with her daughter, Mrs. Theodore Strauch, fell down stairs in the granary on Wednesday morning and fractured a rib. She is 72 years old and it is a severe accident.

—Rev. Jabez Blackhurst, formerly of this place, but now at Litchfield, has about made up his mind to move to the state of Washington. Our Western friends will be gainers of an eloquent preacher, while his many friends here will be sorry to loose him, from the district.

—The sidewalk on the west side of River street is being laid, and peace and harmony once more prevails, to such an extent that the uptown barber and the down town tonsorial artist were seen perched on the same lumber pile contemplating with complacence the construction of the walk.

—Our citizens were highly pleased with the 1st Tournament of the Wright County Cornet Band, which took place here on last Friday. A big crowd of people thronged our streets from morning til night. The questions as to which was the best band, and the best looking band, and the best musicians, were freely discussed. The bands took turns in playing two pieces each, in the bandstand, after having played together for awhile. First came Delano with their uniforms gay, and their music fine and of course the crowd thought this must be the best, by all odds. Then came Waverly with its new uniforms, and bright silver horns, and of course they at once were pronounced the gayest and best. Then came the famous Albion band, in their farmer like simplicity and soft flute notes captivating everybody. All were so good that the last players were given the verdict, every time.

—Adam Horsch, Albert Johnson and T. J. Catlin, of this place were in Minneapolis on Tuesday evening, when the Bradstreet Thurber & Co. building took fire and witnessed the turn out of the fire companies. It was a grand sight. First came an engine that was near by, and fastened on to the pipe and steamed up. By the time it was ready others began to arrive with fires burning and ready for work. Still others came from a long distance under full steam, and the horses sides flecked with foam, all on the keen jump. Hook and lad, hose and all the paraphinalia arrived. Ladders were placed to the upper windows of the six story building where the flames were at work, and hose drawn up, and water began to be poured into the burning building. 13 or 14 engines were at work and hose was strung all over the streets. One hose was swung around a corner and caught a cart of bananas which were being offered for sale, tipping it over and strewing its contents along the street. The street Arabs, news boys, dudes and other bystanders rushed up and took what they could get hold of, like so many pigs would have done, even one fireman with a white vest on was seen munching a banana, while the smoke poured fourth from the burning house. The poor peddler probably suffered greater loss according to his means than did the proprietors of the grand stores going up in the fire. The greedy appetites of so called gentlemen proving more disastrous to him than did the fiery fiend to his richer neighbors. He had a hard time even to save his cart, and no one seemed even to speak an encouraging word, or return a misappropriated banana.

Granger's after Gutzwiller!

Quite a funny story is told us by a Vice President of the Washington's Birthday Association of Delano, who hails from the country and thinks he knows enough to plant corn. It illustrates the veneration our Granger's have for the EAGLE man, and the respect for his opinions. The dialogue is said to have occurred on Saturday last, after the big rain, and took place in Delano:

EDITOR EAGLE. "I think you fellers had better be home planting corn, already."

GRANGER No. 1,—"I think you would do better editing a paper than farming."

GRANGER No. 2, -"You are a bigger fool than I thought you was."

GRANGER No. 3—"Ye 'it 'im 'ard, Ye did.

MARRIED.

DICKEY, MOSSBERG.—At Willmar, on Tuesday, June 6, Miss Anna C. Mossberg to Mr. C. E. Dickey, of Minneapolis.

MRS. WASP AND MRS. BEE.

Said Mrs. Wasp to Mrs. Bee:
"Will you a favor do me?
There's something I can't understand;
Please, ma'am, explain it to me.

"Why do men build for you a house,
And coax you to go in it.
While me, your cousin, they'll not let
Stay near them for a minute?

"I have a sting, I do confess,
And should not like to lose it;
But so have you, and when your vexed
I'm very sure you use it."

"Well," said the Bee, "to you no doubt,
It does seem rather funny;
But people soon forget the stings
Of those who give them honey."

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to heaf of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

APPEARANCES DON'T GOVERN.

I have just about concluded,
'After figgerin' quite a spell,
That appearances don't govern,
And that blood don't allus tell,

Sometimes the shaller plowin'
Will raise the biggest crap.
And it ain't the tallest maple
Allus runs the sweetest sap.

It ain't the richest, rankest grass
The cattle likes the best;
'Tain't likely all the eggs we find
Are the hen's that made the nest.

The tallest stalk of corn that grows
In my twenty acre field
'Ain't got a nubbin on it,
Nor any sign of yield.

The likeliest apple tree that grows
In my neighbor's orchard lot
Is full of blossoms every spring.
But the fruit is sure to rot.

While the crooked or'n'ry seedlin'
Standin' outside by the road,
Comes up smilin' every season.
With a heapin' wagon load.

The largest sheep of all the flock
May grow the coarsest wool:
The finest horse upon the farm
May balk before he'll pull.

The scrubbiest nag unon the track
May win the longest heat;
While the one that has the backin'
May be the easiest beat.

The sweetest drink I ever took
I drank from out a gourd;
The deepest water in the creek
Is jest above the ford.

So I've jest about concluded,
After figgerin' quite a spell,
That appearances don't govern,
And that blood don't allus tell.

MINNEAPOLIS, MAY 19, 1893.

EDITOR BUFFALO JOURNAL;—I desire to thank you for the compliment you paid the old and young men of the league clubs in your paper of May 17th, where you quote them as "working for the party between campaigns." We all realize that the people have grown very tired of those politicians who are never in evidence except during campaigns and when offices are in sight. Republicans, to, have grown tired of honoring men whose party loyalty is secondary to their personal profit and agrandizement.

That class of politicians have largely lost their influence. The people are onto them. It therefore does me good to find so able, influential and liberal a paper as the BUFFALO JOURNAL willing to freely commend the unselfish politicians who are willing to work for the party all the time. It is especially fitting that this praise should come from Wright County whose clubs, under the leadership of Mr. Culkin, were the pride of the State League and a most important factor in the last campaign and I am sure they will appreciate your good words.

Yours Very Truly,
JOHN GOODNOW.

The above is from the BUFFALO JOURNAL of May 24. ,93. This is what Democrats have to meet in Wright County. It speaks for itself. John Goodnow is the chairman of the Republican Leagues of Minnesota and he has unbosomed himself to his friend, Senator A. Y. Eaton, who hastens to make public the need of working every day for party, regardless of everything else. In season and out of season. It seems Wright County has become of such importance as to need some attention at the hands of politicians or it will, before people know it, be placed in the Democratic ranks. Along about election times Wright Co. politicians bob up in Democratic towns with mixed tickets and tell the voters that "you must vote for the best men" and not for your party. Some are led into the trap, and when the votes are counted, as in the Democratic village of Delano, Republicans have a majority of the council, and appoint to all the petty offices where there is profit or honor "straight laced" Republicans. In the school board, every man, and every appointee, that has a vote, is of the same faith. Andin the face of all this they have the "Brazen effrontery" to publish such letters as the above, advising, and complimenting the party politicians for their faithfulness. This used to go. It used to work when the Democratic party had no one to say a word against it, except, for a few weeks on the stump; While the half a dozen Republican papers were parading it before the eyes of their readers weekly. Now it is different, the two democratic papers can publish the same letter and ask the voters to read for themselves and see if they think the G. O. P. is honest with them, when it asks them to vote for the best men only and leads them to believe there are no good men but Republicans that can be got to hold office, and cajoles them into assisting in electing, year after year, Republican majorities on every board where it is possible, and in putting only Republicans on guard. Read the letter, look it over carefully, then consider if is not a fact that you have by the Republicans, assisted by a few milk-and-water Democrats, or Democrats for revenue only been fooled into aiding your political enemy in holding the reins, on many occasions. Don't be fooled again! Read your Democratic papers; follow their advice and pick out the best men you have in your party and ask them by electing them by good rousing majorities, to transact your town, village or county, or school business, for you. Don't sit quietly down and have Republicans publish letters like the above, then join in and aid them in carrying out their plans. Beware! Be on guard! There are as good Democrats as there are Republicans.

A. REPRESENTATIVE of the Associate Prsss is reported to have, in an interview with Secretary Carlisle elicited among other things of interest to the public, that the operations of the U. S. mint commenced in 1792 and up to 1873 a period of 81 years. $8,045,838 had been coined, coinage of silver was then stopped till 1878 when under the Bland Allison Act requiring that between 2 and 4 millions of dollars worth of silver bullion be coined each month up to the 14th of July 1890, twelve years there was coined $337,166,793, with coinage from trade dollars and from Seignorage making $389,886,374 in full legal tender silver mony issued since 1878. Of this only $58,016,019 were in actual circulation on the first day of the month. The act of July 14, 1890 required the Secretary to purchase 4,500,000 ounces of silver, monthly under this act there has been coined $29,408,461, making the silver coinage since 1878 $419,294,838, or more than fifty times as much as was coined during the previous period of eighty one years. There is now uncoined bullion costing $114,299,920 which is $10,888,534, more than it could be sold for to-day and still under the present law he is obliged to continue buying, paying for it with gold.

LAST Friday reports give the price of wheat as 63 cts per bushel in Chicago. Half a cent lower than ever known before in change, in that city. Had it not been for the wonderful McKinley bill who knows how much lower it would have gone?

THE Brainerd Journal gives an account of the death of Edwin Peck aged 58 years, under circumstances pointing to murder. Henry Jackson has been placed under arrest for the act.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 9. 1893.

While President Cleveland and Secretary Carlisle believe that the Sherman silver law is responsible for the present unsettled financial status and that its repeal is absolutely necessary for the welfare and prosperity of the the country, and that the failure of the extra session of Congress, to be held in September, to repeal it promptly will precipitate a general financial panic, they are not doing the slightest thing to force any Senator or Representative to vote for its repeal against his honest opinion, nor will they; but they do ask that every man, Congressman and individual, shall study this question anew, not from the point of view of last year or the year before, but from the point of view of today, with all the attendent circumstances in the industrial, business and financial world, believing that such intelligent study of the question cannot fail to result in a practically unanimous vote for its repeal as soon as the extra session of Congress gets together. The practical operation of the Sherman law has shown it to be a bad law; that's why the President and the Secretary of the Treasury wish it repealed.

There is no truth in the sensational rumor sent out from Waseington early this week, that the British Ambassador has demanded of this Government reparation, pecuniary and by apology, for the arrest of an officer of the British steamer Nigretia at New Orleans last month. The arrest has been in a courageous note brought to the State Deparment and an investigation is now being made of the case. If the facts show that reparation is due it will be made promptly without any demand. The originator of the silly rumor must have been entirely ignorant of diplomatic methods.

It is evident to even the most careless observer that President Cleveland is a much better politician now than he was eight years ago. There is no denying the fact that democrats have been a little nervous over the distribution of the New York Federal offices, owing to the threatening attitude which Tammany and anti-Tammany democrats have occupied toward each other. It was feared that any positive recognization of either side by the administration would precipitate a faction fight in New York that would endanger, if it did not actually lose, the State. There is no longer any such fear. President Cleveland has proven by his selection of a postmaster for New York City that he knows how to select men who will be equally acceptable and satisfactory to Tammany and anti-Tammany democrats. President Cleveland has been invited to speak at the 4th of July celebration by Tammany Hall, which shows how little truth there is in the newspaper talk about Tammany's not liking the President.

The much-talked-about new extradition treaty with Russia was officially promulgated this week and notice given by Presidential proclamation that it would go into effect on the 24th, of the present month. About the only material difference between this and reciprocity treaties we have with other countries is that attempts against the life of the head of either government or members of his family are not classed as political offenses, but are made extraditable crimes. According to the terms of the new treaty it may be terminated upon six months notice by either government. Officials here do not expect that the working of the new treaty will bring about any of the calamities so freely predicted by those who are opposed to it.

Ex-Senator Saunders, of Nebraska, who is the father-in-law of that high-flying young man, once known to the toadies of the Metropolis as "Prince Harrison," now plain Russell Harrison in compliance with a request, has resigned his membership on the Utah Commission, and H. C. Lett, who was a prominent candidate for governor of the Territory, has been appointed in his place, This makes the Commission stand three democrats nnd two republicans, and, in view of the expectation that the Territory will be admitted to Statehood at the comming session of Congress, it is not expected that any further changes will be made in the Commission.

Secretary Herbert, accompanied by a number ot prominent officials and a few invited guests, will go over to Phidadelphia tomorrow morning to witness the launching of the battleship Massachusetts.

Ever since the organization of the National banking system, one of its important laws has been construed in favor of the stockholders, but hereafter this law will be construed in favor of the depositors and other creditors of these banks. The law in question is that which provides for the levying of an assessment, up to 100 per cent of the face of stock held, on the stockholders of banks, to make good any losses. It has been customary to wait until all the other assets of a broken bank has been realized on before making this assessment; hereafter it will be made as soon after a bank closes its doors as possible.

On Tuesday we took occasion to drive over to to the county seat. We fonnd the roads very dusty, and the weather quite warm. Farmers were at work cultivating corn that is just getting big enough to be plainly seen above ground, all along the road. At this season of the year our County seat is at her best. Court was in session and the hotels and saloons were doing a rushing business. The streets are mostly all torn up, and big forces of men and teams were trying to level down the hills and up the hollows, so that people could pass along more easily. Considerable building is being done, some quite nice residences are being put up among the trees here and there. It appears to be a good healthy growth and Buffalo bids fair, in the near future, to contest with Delano for first place among the many thriving villages of Wright county.

Judge Smith and a Jury of twelve were at work over the case of Tom Kelly vs the G. N. R'y. Kelly lost his foot while employed by the G. N. at Cottonwood. Among Attorneys noticed in the village were C. A. Ebert and son Henry, and Dodge, of Minneapolis, Tarbox, Monticello, Cochran and Casey, Waverly; O'Hair, Delano; Sexton, Cokato; Eaton, Alley, Cutting, Wendell, Pidgeon, Culken, of Buffalo; Drs. Wimer, of Marshall; and Gibbs, of Monticello, were in attendance.

Report of Grand Jury.

1. The Grand Jury of Wright County desire to express great regret at the continual absence of the Commissioner of the second district from his seat on the board of County Commissioners.

The interests of the County suffer seriously by the imperfect representation which has been the rule during the past twelve months. The records of the proceedings of the Board show that from June 1892 to June 1893 ten meetings of the Board were held and only one of which the Commissioner from the second district was present.

If the sickness of the present incumbent prevents his taking part in the deliberations of the County Board, it is the opinion of the Grand Jury that his early resignation or removal is necessary in the interest of the taxpayer.

2. The Grand Jury find that the offices of the Register of Deeds Judge of Probate, and Clerk of Court are inadequate in size and in the case of the Probate office the records are kept in a very unsafe and insecure depository.

3. The large surplus in the County revenue fund is in our opinion unnecessary and in every way opposed to public policy. We therefore recommend a reduction in the tax levy for the ensuing year.

Granger's after Gutzwiller!

Quite a funny story is told us by a Vice President of the Washington's Birthday Association of Delano, who hails from the country and thinks he knows enough to plant corn. It illustrates the veneration our Granger's have for the EAGLE man, and the respect for his opinions. The dialogue is said to have occurred on Saturday last, after the big rain, and took place in Delano:

EDITOR EAGLE. "I think you fellers had better be home planting corn, already."

GRANGER No. 2, -"You are a bigger fool than I thought you was."

GRANGER No. 3—"Ye 'it 'im 'ard, Ye did.

With the third part of "Omega," the work of the French astronomer Flammarion, which appears in the Cosmopolitan for July, the reader is able to grasp something of the great purpose of the author. "Omega" is declared by those who have read the entire work to be one of the most remarkable writings of the century. While pretending to be a novel, it is a work having a deeply philosophical purpose, as is more fully developed in later chapters. It is something that no fairly intelligent person can afford not to read, and is surely destined to become a classic.

In a recent number of The Cosmopolitan a story was published, entitled "The House of the Dragons," which received wide criticism because of the importance of the life problems involved. A daughter of Bishop Potter, who was for some time connected with important mission work among the working girls of New York, has undertaken to reply, and discusses another side of the question in the July number.

An interesting article on the "City of Brooklyn," by Murat Halstead: the peculiar games of the New Mexican Indians, by Chas. F. Lummis; "Sorosis," by Margaret Monton Merrill; the fight of the Cumberland and Merrimac, told by Captain Thos. Selfridge, one of the survivors; a paper on "The Deserted Homes of New England;" an account of the Brussels Monetary conference, by one of its most distinguished members: a curions story of the southwest, by Opie Read, and a contribution by Mr. Howells, are among the many important papers of the June issue.

DELANO, Wright Co., - MINN.

THERE are reported to be 3,000,000 commercial drummers in this country, only three of whom are women.

THE last letter written by George Washington was recently sold at auction in Philadelphia for eight hundred and fifty dollars.

THE leading medical authorities in New York express themselves as of the opinion that this country has nothing to fear from a cholera invasion.

BABIES may be checked at the world's fair now. We have seen babies with a fog-horn accompaniment that sounded as though even a world's fair wouldn't check them.

IRELAND sends annually 40,000 tons—in round numbers some 640,000,000—of eggs to England. This is something of an offset to the English yolk of which she complains.

IN a Boston paper we find this advertisement: "A middle-aged young lady wants a situation." Where else in all the world would one find a "middle-aged young lady" except in Boston?

IN her translated book Lady Colin Campbell says that kissing ruins the complexion. We wondered what was spoiling the complexion of so many Chicago girls.

SIAM, which has never had a legation in this country, has established one at Washington, where her dreamy representative will be able to show the hustling diplomats of other countries the real Siam ease.

A GENTLEMAN who economizes by declining to take a newspaper may save money for a time, but he is dead sure to lose every cent in his clothes the first time he meets the gentle confidence man. This statement can be verified by a glance at the police records of any large city any day in the week.

A CURIOUS will was placed on record in Louisville. It was written by a young woman who recently committed suicide by taking poison. In the last agonies of death she had scrawled her parting injunctions to her friends in this world on the pillow with a dull pencil. This pillow case is to be regularly recorded and filed.

THE rate schedule of one of the transatlantic steamship companies sets forth that the price of passage for dogs, cats and monkeys is $10 each, and that those animals "must be caged before being brought on the steamer, and will then be placed in charge of the butcher." The idea that this may suggest to a seasick passenger is almost petrifying.

IRON ore was first mined in the United States in 1608, when about thirty-five tons were exported from Jamestown, Va. The ore production was inconsiderable until the present century. In 1810 it was but 100,000 tons per year; in 1850 it reached about 1,600,000; while in 1890 the vast total was more than 15,500,000, 9,000,000 of this coming from the Lake Superior mines.

NEAR the Woman's building on the world's fair grounds is an edifice for the accommodation of the small children whose parents take them to the fair, but who do not wish to have the trouble and care of them while there. For a small fee the child can be left in the hands of trustworthy nurses and can stay contentedly in the comfortable playground which has been provided until its parents are ready to leave.

AUSTRALIA has invented the stump-jumping plow. The farmers who use it are claim jumpers. The dealers who sell them are counter jumpers. With the boomerang and stump-jumping plow as the principal implements of war and peace, the kangaroo and jack rabbit as the typical fauna, and even the banks jumping their liabilities, Australia should follow up the simile and make every year leap year, every season spring, and the national coat of arms jumping jack.

WHEN a man has accumulated wealth he seeks fame. Some rich men become patrons of art, others distinguish themselves by works of philanthropy, and still others purchase seats in the senate of the United States. There is a Maine millionaire, however, who avoids the common avenues to glory and wins the plaudits of the multitude in the dazzling uniform of a drum major of a village band. And if there is anything more impressive than the drum major of a rural band—well, it can only be the drum major of some other rural band.

THE prettiest scene in the tour of Infanta Eulalie was when she visited the New York normal college and saw the bright faces of the nineteen hundred young schoolgirls. The school was presented to her highness, who bowed, and nineteen hundred girls arose and bowed in return, and one girl, an American born of Spanish parents, made a speech of welcome, speaking Spanish. To this the infanta replied, saying among other things: "I can only add that I wish I was seated on the benches with you." The exercises that took place highly pleased the princess.

THE total silver production for 1891 is placed at 143,550,000 troy ounces, of which the United States produced 58,330,000. The government purchased 54,312,812 ounces in that year, a very considerable proportion of the world's output. In 1892 the United States produced 60,000,000 ounces, at an average cost of 77.5 cents per ounce. The value of our yearly silver production has steadily increased. The production of gold, on the other hand, has been much less in the United States during the past twenty years preceding. The value of gold mined in 1891 was $33,175,000,246.

FRANKLIN J. APPLEY, of the Pawtucket (R. I.) boat club, intends to row from that city to the world's fair in a thirty-one-foot aluminum racing shell. Last year Mr. Appley performed the feat, till then unprecedented, of rowing to New York in a racing shell. He will follow the same route on his world's fair trip—down Narragansett bay and through Long Island sound. He will connect with the lakes by the Erie canal, after rowing up the Hudson river. The actual rowing distance will be between 1,500 and 2,000 miles, and Mr. Appley expects to be from six to ten weeks on the journey.

BULLET FOR A BANDIT.

Sontag, the Notorious Western Outlaw and One of the Vasalia Train Robbers, Was Shot and Captured by a Posse of United States Deputy Marshals, One of Whom Is Also Wounded—Evans, Sontag's Partner, Eludes Arrest.

VISALIA, Cal., June 13.—After a search extending over ten months and after six encounters with different legal posses the notorious train robbers, John Sontag and Chris Evans, were finally met Sunday night by four deputy United States marshals and as a result of the encounter which followed Sontag was wounded, possibly fatally, and is now in custody, having been brought here at 10:30 Monday forenoon. His companion, Chris Evans, escaped after firing forty shots at his pursuers. Where he made his stand he left his hat and two empty guns, and the ground was found covered with blood, indicating that he, too, is wounded. The four officers who made attack upon the bandits were United States Marshal Gard and his deputy, Edward Rapelje, a deputy sheriff of Fresno county, Fred Jackson, an officer from Navada, and Thomas Burn, who was with Badger when the latter was shot by the robbers last month.

The officers had been in the mountains for weeks looking for the robbers, and Sunday afternoon encamped at a vacant house 18 miles northeast from this city. About twenty minutes before sunset Rapelje went to the rear door of the house and saw two men coming down the hill and toward the place. On closer observation it was discovered that the men were no other than Evans and Sontag, the fugitive desperadoes. Evans was in the lead and carried a rifle and shotgun, and Sontag was armed with simple a rifle. Rapelje turned around to his comrades in the house and said: "Hello, here comes two men down hill." They jumped up quickly and grabbed their guns and prepared to make fight. As the officers went around the back corner Evans saw Rapelje and throwing his rifle to his shoulder took deliberate aim and fired.

Just then Jackson stepped around behind Rapelje and opened fire on the bandits. Sontag was seen to throw up both hands and fall backward. Then the firing became general, and Evans returned the shots with vengeance. Evans got behind an old rubbish pile and kept up a raking fusillade. Jackson went around the far end of the house to see if he could get a better place from which to shoot, and as he went around he was shot in the left leg. Forty shots were exchanged between the officers and the bandits, but the sun went down and darkness ended the battle.

Evans was seen to crawl on his stomach from behind the rubbish, and Rapelje again opened fire upon him. Evans then rose to his feet and ran toward the hills, followed by Rapelje, who continued firing. Evans did not return the fire and in a few minutes was out of sight. Rapelje returned to the house and procuring a wagon brought Jackson to this city soon after midnight. Marshal Gard and Burns remained at the scene until morning. Sontag lay behind a stack of hay all night, where he was found by Gard and Burns. Sontag says he spit blood all night. There is a glancing wound along his forehead and one on each side of his nose. It is claimed that he inflicted these wounds himself, though this is denied.

Evans' tracks show that he started toward Visalia, and his home will be watched day and night. Sontag talks freely and says the jig is up and he does not care for the future. It is possible that Sontag may recover from his wounds, though attending physicians will express no decided opinion. Officers are now searching the hills in hope of finding Evans, and thus completing at once the long chase.

[The train robbery, which was the beginning of his criminal chapter, occurred at a station named Collis, near Fresno, Cal., August 3, 1892. An express car was blown up with dynamite and Express Messenger George D. Roberts seriously injured. Officers soon after arrested George Sontag at the house of Chris Evans in this city. He was afterward tried and sent to the penitentiary for life. When an attempt was made to arrest Evans he and John Sontag opened fire on the officers wounding George Witty. In the second encounter Oscar Beaver, an officer, was killed in front of the Evans house. September 14 Andrew McGinniss and Victor C. Wilson were killed in the mountains by the bandits an two other officers were wounded. May 26 S. J. Black, another officer, was wounded by the bandits in the mountains. No previous criminal incident in the history of California has occasioned greater public interest. Until the train robbery occurred Evans had borne a good reputation. He is an educated man and a native of Canada. He has a wife and children living in this city. The two Sontag brothers lived in Minnesota, coming to this state several years ago.]

AN EXCITING SCENE.

Col. Ainsworth Threatened with Violence During the Progress of the Inquiry Into the Ford Theater Horror.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—At Monday's session of the Ford theater inquest a well-dressed man walked forward and in a voice trembling with passion, shaking his fist in Col. Ainsworth's face, shouted: "You've murdered my brother, and you shan't sit there intimidating these witnesses." The man was Charles Banes, whose brother was a victim of the disaster. After the uproar thus occasioned had quieted, Mr. Davis, representing Col. Ainsworth, started to speak, when a dozen excited department clerks rose to their feet and shouted for him to sit down. The lieutenant of police present endeavored to quiet the outbreak, but his voice was as ineffectual as it would have been in a cyclone. The excitement grew in intensity. Nearly every clerk present who was employed in the old theater building was on his feet shouting. At first they only called "Sit down," "Shut your mouth." But finally some frenzied individual cried: "Hang him; hang him!" Men were springing forward by this time and many spectators present sought cover.

During the excitement Juror B. H. Warner, a wealthy citizen, suggested to the coroner that the episode that had just occurred showed the existence of a feeling that would best be silenced by the withdrawal of the party against whom it was directed. He continued:

"I mention no names, but simply make the suggestion that the party most concerned should withdraw. There is a belief among many of those here that his presence serves as an intimidation to witnesses. There is a feeling here which does not break out, but which is nevertheless present, that intimidation is being carried on, and I therefore object to the presence of any person who is likely to be blamed for participation in this affair."

Loud applause followed Mr. Warner's remarks, and Dr. Shaeffer whispered a request to Col. Ainsworth to withdraw. He refused to do so, however, and the coroner turning to the jury said he had no right to exclude from the hearing any person who was likely to be a party to the verdict.

Juror Hanvy said he had been told by a dozen clerks that they had been afraid to testify and would have refused to do so but for the letter of the secretary of war.

A mad rush had just begun in the direction of Col. Ainsworth when Juror Warner rose and standing on his chair begged for order. He said:

"This outbreak of feeling must be suppressed, not by the strong hand of the law but by the hand of the fraternity. (Applause.) I appeal to you to have fair play as American citizens and not to stain the name of the glorious capital of this republic. I appeal to you in the name of the Master who reigns above."

The crowd fell into Mr. Warner's way of thinking and cried "Yes, yes." He saw his advantage and made an appeal to let the question of allowing Col. Ainsworth to remain be settled by cool heads. When he took his seat, however, there were more threatening murmurings.

Col. Ainsworth, who was sitting with his counsel at a table facing the six jurymen, quailed perceptibly at this clamor, and his few friends and a squad of police formed a guard about him. It was lucky that they did so, for the crowd made a forward movement as if to execute their cry, and in the turmoil Ainsworth was hurried through a side door of the hall to a place of safety. Had it not been for the presence of the police Col. Ainsworth would have undoubtedly suffered bodily injury.

After this outburst it was impossible for the coroner to proceed further and he announced that the inquest would be adjourned until to-day at the station house of the First police precinct. This precipitated a cry against a star chamber investigation and an indignation meeting was at once organized. As a result of the discussion a committee was appointed to wait on the president of the United States and ask him to suspend Col. Ainsworth pending the result of the investigation by the coroner's jury and the court of inquiry ordered by the secretary of war.

Feeling has been running high against Col. Ainsworth ever since the sad affair occurred, it being alleged that he was a martinet and would not permit the clerks in his bureau to be furloughed while repairs were being made at the old theater, although it was known to be unfit for occupancy and unsafe. Monday's demonstration has put an end to a further public trial.

ST. ANNE'S CHURCH BURNED.

The Famous Resort of Crippled Pilgrims Near Kankakee, Ill., Destroyed by Fire.

KANKAKEE, Ill., June 13.—The French Catholic church at St. Anne, Kankakee county, was struck by lightning and burned Saturday evening. The building was erected about twelve years ago and cost $30,000. The loss is partially covered by insurance. Next to the famous church at St. Anne de Beaupre in Canada this church was the most famous resort of pilgrims in America. Thousands annually gathered here during the month of June to worship. Large numbers of crippled and sick come from Chicago on St. Anne's day and gather around the holy shrine said to contain a portion of the body of the blessed saint. Many wonderful cures have been reported and the attendance at the coming St. Anne's day would have been larger than ever. The congregation was originally established by Rev. Father Chiniquy, who has since renounced and denounced the church. His magnificent residence, located at the same place, was also destroyed by fire a short time ago.

Heitset is an aged and wealthy German, whose first wife is dead. He has quarreled with all his children, as well as nearly every one else in town. About 18 months ago he remarried. In less than six months he began to pound his wife and she secured a divorce on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment. She not only got a divorce, but a good share of the old man's property. This was a severe blow to him and he set to work to remarry his divorced wife, and the day after they were legally separated they were remarried. He has now resumed his old pastime of pounding her and was sent to jail. While there his wife began a suit for a second divorce, and it will come up before Judge Baxter at the next term of court.

Two Children Killed.

Olga Beier, aged 15, and her brother Emil, 7½ years old, children of August Beier, were killed in Maple Grove township, Hennepin county. A brother, named Henry, 14 years old, was with them, but he escaped unhurt. The wind had been blowing hard all day, but its fury increased suddenly, and the children, who were out on the farm, ran behind a shed for shelter. They had no sooner reached the place before a terrible gust blew the shed down. Olga attempted to escape, but her head was caught by the corner of the building, pinning her to the ground and crushing her skull. The little boy was buried under the debris. Henry was looking at the storm from behind a corner, and as the shed fell he jumped away and out of danger.

Tossed by a Cow.

Chas. Schmidt, a St. Cloud butcher, was seriously hurt by a vicious cow which he was leading along a street. She attacked him from behind, knocked him down and charged again, throwing him in the air. As he struck on the pavement, she stabbed her horn in his left hip and shook him in the air. When she finally dropped him, she walked quietly away. Schmidt is a large, powerful man, but was handled like an infant. He was taken to the hospital. His injuries are very serious, but not fatal.

Forgery.

John G. Gorman and Joseph Carbora were arrested in Minneapolis charged with forgery. Gorman is crippled, so that he cannot use either legs or arms, and Carbora is a youth who works at Roche's candy factory. Gorman confessed to having passed worthless checks, and, when captured, had a handful of blank checks. He professed to be glad that he had been arrested, as he said he intended to murder a girl he was acquainted with. The girl had jilted him.

News in Brief.

Mrs. Dan Young, proprietor of the Eagle hotel, Winona, while sewing was taken with a fit, overturning a lamp. She was fatally burned.

Wm. Allen, of Fergus Falls, while putting a ring in a bull's nose, was attacked by the animal. His collar bone was broken and otherwise injured. Timely assistance saved his life.

Henry Kuno, a river driver, was killed on the St. Paul & Duluth railroad, near Kettle River station. He was lying asleep on the track and a whisky bottle was found near his side.

Thomas Raines, an engineer in the Bemis Bag factory, Minneapolis, was scalded to death by escaping steam. One of the heaters blew out with great force.

While J. Allsop was breaking with five horses at Ellsborough a bolt of lightning killed every horse.

J. C. Donken was found dead in the saloon of N. Kraemer, at St. Cloud. Donken was an habitual drunkard, always more or less saturated. He went into a saloon about noon and the bartender took him into one of the card rooms, placed him in a chair and at 6 o'clock he went to waken Donken and found he had fallen on the floor and was dead.

The surveyor general of the state has selected 5,280 acres of government lands in Lake county, under the grant of the United States of March 12, 1860. They are acquired by the state under the swamp land act, but it is stated that there is little or no wet or stump land in the tract designated by the surveyor general. Indeed they are known to be mineral lands and exceedingly valuable.

A mad dog was killed at Brockway, fortunately before it had bitten any other animal.

Game Warden Farnham arrested three Finlanders and captured 30 nets in the vicinity of Rush Lake.

Lightning struck two boys at Hastings. Elmer Moss, aged 14 years, was instantly killed, and Eugene Kenney, aged 12 years, was rendered senseless for a few moments and badly burned on his right side and arm. The boys were herding cows, seeking shelter under a tree from the rain, when struck by lightning. Three horses belonging to George Speaker, of Ravenna, were also killed by lightning.

Gus Heintz, a laborer, while walking home from Rochester after a spree, was run over by a freight train and killed. The top of his skull was almost cut away.

GROWING CRAZE FOR RANK.

American Mothers and Daughters at the East Showing Undesirable Development.

The increasing craze for rank on the part of American mothers and daughters—for, to do him justice, paterfamilias is as a rule indifferent to such empty honors, and only buys his wife the coveted bauble simply to please, or maybe to quiet, his womankind—is regarded by the New York Tribune as a very curious phase of our fin de siecle civilization. It is certainly not a dignified nor a desirable development on the part of the daughters of the republic; but, while English people are wont to comment scornfully—and perhaps justly—upon our republican snobbishness, they seem to forget that the intense greed and rapacity for American dollars displayed on the part of their jeunesse doree is still more discreditable. Quite a new departure has been inaugurated in these latter-day transactions, which proves that the British youth has a commercial instinct that would do credit to the keenest Yankee. Not only does he now require that his bride shall be endowed with an immense fortune, but he pleasantly anticipates her demise and demands that not merely shall papa-in-law's money be settled on himself and her children, but that the heritage shall enrich his noble family in case of nonissue. In the meanwhile, with the ingenious and brutal frankness of his class, he speaks confidently of the time when he shall have "shunted" off his American connections forever.

"Have people gone crazy," said an indignant American mother the other day, "that they actually put a price upon a daughter's life, and send her among strangers who have everything to gain and nothing to lose by her death?"

"What a dreadfully grewsome idea!" said her companion, rather shocked.

"Well, what is it but that, I should like to know! You can't deny that if they grow tired of her they would rather have her money without the encumbrance."

SLEEP.

"Blessed be the man that first invented sleep."—Don Quixote.

Sleep is the kind physician
Forever at our call,
To comfort is her mission
Whatever woes befall.
In hovel or in palace,
Where terror reigns, or malice,
She holds her sacred chalice
And seals the eyes of all.

Sleep is as sweet as summer
And comes as falls the dew;
No snares can overcome her,
To man she's ever true.
She stills the strife of foemen,
She soothes both prince and yoeman,
Her breast is barred to no man,
Her favor mortals sue.

Sleep is a high-born maiden,
Queen almoner of night;
Sweet dreams with which she's laden
Put all our cares to flight.
Her face is dark, yet tender,
Girt with supernal splendor,
Into her arms surrender
The weary, world-worn wight.

She brews for all a potion
Wherein we quench our woes;
Majestic, mild her motion
As round the world she goes.
The sick all wait her pleasure,
The poor man dreams of treasure,
The busy man has leisure:
To all she brings repose.

Sleep hath a gracious garden,
There asphodel doth blow,
Pale poppies plead for pardon,
Rare herbs rich spices grow.
Here, freed from each day's burden
With joy and ease for guerdon,
We rest as blithe as birds on
The leaves that linger low.

Snug refuge from the daytime,
Safe shelter from the storm,
Our dearest dreams have playtime,
Our fancy range takes form,
Like rain to thirsty flowers,
That droop for pearly showers,
Sleep shields us thro' dark hours
And guides us, safe and warm.

Large gifts she lends the dreamer,
His genius then holds sway,
And high all bards esteem her
And prefer her to the day.
Good luck attends the lover,
His lady's face will hover
In fancy while stars cover
The earth, that's grim and gray.

Sleep queens it o'er the water,
Her sway is o'er the land,
Death claims her as a daughter,
The fairest of his band.
Serene, benign, immortal,
By her fair, ivory portal,
She waits for every mortal
To grasp him by the hand.
—James E. Kinsella, in Inter Ocean.

Stood by His Colors.

"DURING the greater part of the war," said the retired skipper, "there was a large number of American clippers stalled in Hong Kong harbor, having orders to remain there from their owners, who feared the Alabama. This arrangement did not at all please the captains and officers, as many of us were anxious to go home and ship in the navy; but orders were orders. We could not leave the ships, and the frequent visits of the Alabama herself to the harbor, forcing herself 'into our midst,' as the saying goes, were very vivid reminders that neutral waters were a pretty good sort of invention.

"Although we passed the long weeks and months as pleasantly as we could with all kinds of arrangements for killing time, both on shipboard and on shore, there was, of course, a continual and concerted growl going up from our little band of Yankee skippers; and old Hobbs was the star growler of us all. Now, to attain that distinction among sailors a man must growl at the slightest provocation, vehemently and with highly artistic feeling—not to mention a generous flavoring of profanity. So you can imagine the effect when Hobbs opened out at something that displeased him.

"His ship was the Humming Bird, a brand-new clipper hailing from Boston. The trip out to Hong Kong had been her maiden one, and it was chafing to Hobb's not very smooth temper to have her lie idle so early in her career. Having great faith in the ship's speed and in his seamanship, he was more than anxious to put to sea, and let Semmes catch him if he could; but, like the rest of us, his orders to remain were positive.

"Occasionally a ship would manage to clear by sailing under some foreign flag; but, as it was a complicated process involving fathoms of red tape, and very often fell through just when everything seemed favorable, it was not resorted to very often. When it was tried, however, old Hobbs would go on his beam ends with wrath. He would fume and rant, casting aspersions on the patriotism of the owners, the agents, the officers, and even the Chinese crew. He was so intensely patriotic that to see a good Yankee craft sail under false colors would keep him boiling for a week.

"You can see then what his feelings were when one day he was ordered to proceed to Sumatra under the British flag. He fumed, ranted and swore, and then fumed, ranted and swore over again, with a few extra choice nautical anathemas thrown in for emphasis. This necessary operation over, he sent ashore to the native sailmakers for a British flag, the smallest to be had. When it came aboard—it was about two by four feet in size—Hobbs looked at it askance, and ordered it put out of sight until sailing day.

"Sailing day arrived, and the British flag was seen fluttering quietly from its proper place on the Humming Bird. It attracted mighty little attention, however, for the Alabama was entering the harbor. She floated slowly along and dropped anchor exceedingly close to the Humming Bird. About this time the harbor master was seen in his boat being rowed rapidly towards Hobbs' ship, and a huge bundle of bunting, about the size of an old shellback's sea chest, was rapidly hauled to the main-top of the Humming Bird.

"The harbor master pulled up alongside the Humming Bird and yelled for the captain. It could be seen that he was angry about something. Hobbs came to the rail in his plug hat and long-tailed bottle-green coat, the customary uniform of a skipper in those days, and asked the harbor master what he could do.

"'I want you to take down that flag instantly, sir,' said the harbor master.

"'Guess not,' said Hobbs.

"'It's a disgrace, sir, and an insult to hoist such a flag as that!'

"'What's the matter with the flag?' said Hobbs, surprised.

"'It's all wrong, sir; the proportions are all wrong. The field is too long for its width, and the rest of it is too wide for its length. The crosses are wrongly arranged, sir, and it is a vile caricature of an honored flag, sir! Remove it immediately!'

"'Guess not,' said Hobbs, again. 'That flag was bought in a British port and made by a British subject. He was a Chinaman, but that is neither here nor there. I don't care if it is the flag of Patagonia, so long as it was sold to me for that of England. Good morning!'

"The harbor master had nothing to say to this and started back; but he had no sooner done so than the main halliards were pulled, the bundle at the peak broke out and in a second the stars and stripes were waving before the astonished eyes of the harbor master, Yankee skippers and Capt. Semmes, of the Alabama. Indeed, so large was 'old glory' in this particular case that it almost brushed the Alabama's decks, the vessels being so near together. The huge flag had been presented to the ship at her launching, and to the excited spectators on this occasion seemed larger than the ship herself.

"The harbor master put about, angrier than before, and demanded explanations.

"'What does that flag mean, sir?' said he.

"'That's my house flag,' said Hobbs, 'the trade mark of my owners. I do not know whether that red one up there is humpbacked and clubfooted or not; but you can't give me any points on the construction of that article up there with the stripes on it. I propose to fly that flag how I please, when I please and where I please, whether it be in Hong Kong or in hell! For the second time, good morning!' and Hobbs went below.

"The 'house flag' being technically merely the insignia of the line or owners, the harbor master could carry the argument no further. Semmes, however, was so angry at having the stars and stripes flaunted in his face that he swore to blow the Humming Bird out of the water if he ever caught her outside, no matter what flag she sailed under. He never did it, however, as this voyage hung fire as so many others did, and, as shortly after this the Alabama exchanged with the Kearsarge certain little civilities we all know about, his blowing days were over."—N. AS SHE IS SPOKE ON BROADWAY.

Comments That Followed the Falling of Two Horses.

The voluntary comments of an average crowd, aroused to temporary excitement by some trifling incident in the street, afford food for reflection on Murray and Cobbett "as they are spoke."

A poorly-shod horse attached to a big, lumbering brewer's wagon fell down at Twenty-third street and Broadway. In endeavoring to get the frightened animal to its feet again the driver of the wagon contrived to throw the other horse down also.

The two powerful animals soon became involved in an apparently inextricable tangle. They were sprawled out across the tracks in such a manner as to block both the Broadway cars and the Twenty-third street cars in the busiest hour of the afternoon.

The crowd that jostled about on the heaps of snow surrounding the frantic animals, offering well-intended suggestions to the equally frantic driver, was, presumably, as representative a crowd as could be gathered anywhere in New York. The policeman who takes care of the crossing, or pretends to, opened the ball.

"What was you thinkin' of?" he said, angrily. "Look what you've did. A man like you is ain't fit to drive cows."

"It ain't the fault of him. Them shoes is a disgrace to any man what owns a horse." This remark from a well-dressed, intelligent-looking man who had emerged from a neighboring restaurant and was industriously assisting the driver to undo the harness while other people talked.

"Keep away from there if you don't want to get your legs broke!" came from a prosperous-looking man with a book and two or three newspapers in his hand, who alighted from one of the cars going up-town in order to ascertain the cause of delay.

"What is my legs to you? Keep your advice until it is asked for," was the pert rejoinder of the lad to whom the remark was addressed.

"Poor creatures; can't anybody do something for them? They'll kill themselves," said a sympathetic woman.

"Less said and more done the better," was the sententious reply of a man who was tugging away with all his might at one of the wheels.

"Put blankets under their feet," suggested a man who was driving by in a light wagon. "I done that with my horse yesterday and he was up in a jiffy."

"Blankets be blowed!" said the driver, getting irritated; "where will I be getting them?"

By this time the crowd numbered nearly two hundred people and the poor teamster was driven to distraction with the chorus of advice hurled at him by impatient people. In the course of twenty minutes a stalwart porter ran across the street from the Fifth Avenue hotel. It was apparent at once that he was accustomed to horses. He called two or three car-drivers to his assistance and began a plan of campaign. In five minutes more the horses were on their feet again, dragging their load through Twenty-third street.

"Them fellers are a nuisance," remarked a fashionably dressed Broadway lounger, who had been an interested spectator from the beginning.

"Yes," assented the policeman. "But it ain't no good having their names took. You can't get people to appear in court against 'em."—N. Y. Times.

DECOMPOSED BY ELECTRICITY.

Iron, Water and Gas Mains Injured by Proximity to Wires.

Some singular discoveries have been made lately in various parts of the country with reference to the perishability of iron. Water or gas mains that have been dug up are found to have virtually crumbled to pieces in a way never noticed before. The phenomenon is regarded as something of a mystery and the most plausible theory advanced concerning it is that the piping has been laid in the vicinity of electric wires and that the electricity has had the effect of disintegrating it in some way.

This subject was brought to the attention of Prof. Barrett of the electricity department of the exposition, and he was asked what he knew on the subject. He said:

"I have read and heard a good deal on this subject of late years. But it is a mistake to suppose that the contact or contiguity of the piping and the electric wires is accidental. All electric plants you understand, use the earth as a part of their circuits, whether to produce electric power or electric lights. They have to pump the electricity, so to speak, from the north pole to the south pole of their circuits through the ground, and thus requires a great deal of power, in proportion to the non-conducting resistance of the soil. Consequently the electrical engineers are always contriving some way to lessen the labor of their engines.

"One way that they accomplish this is to run one end of the wire into a great iron scrap heap composed of old railroad iron and car wheels. But an easier and cheaper way is to connect this wire with some underground pipe system that belongs to some one else. For instance, if a man with an electric plant can connect his circuit with the city water mains he has the entire city water-pipe system to pump his electricity into instead of pumping it into the earth, and this lightens his labor very much. A lead pipe will answer the same purpose tolerably well, especially when it is connected with an iron pipe, but it is best to connect with an iron pipe.

"Now this making electric conductors of water and gas mains and of lead piping demoralizes it beyond all doubt. My information, though, as I said, comes second-hand. I have never seen any of these results that are reported, and least of all have I met with any on the exposition grounds, where the wires and piping are well separated and the usual motive for running them together is wanting. As to the character of the injury done the iron I know nothing. I do not know whether it crystallizes it or merely promotes oxidation."—Chicago Times.

GEN. VALLEJO WAS ABUSED.

The Yankees Robbed Him, but He Liked Them.

At the time of the influx of Americans to California the Spanish general, Vallejo, was literally "monarch of all he surveyed." His lands were of the extent of a German principality; his cattle roamed "a thousand hills;" his horses numbered far into the thousands.

He welcomed the strangers; he encouraged and assisted in the annexation of the country; he gave right and left of his possessions. Many whom he trusted robbed him, many whom he benefited proved ungrateful; yet he gloried in the progress of California, and he was too proud to complain on his own account.

"I like the Yankees," he used to say. "I would rather be swindled by them than by anybody else; they do it so scientifically."

When one of his sons, in bitterness of spirit, wished to give the world facts concerning injustices which the family had endured, he said:

"No; let it go. What good to keep open an old sore? Let the wound heal. I brought this upon myself. I did what I thought was best. It was best for the country, and so far as I am concerned I can stand it."—Harper's Magazine.

A Bitter Disappointment.

A Young Man who, through no fault of his was about to be married, was calling on the Girl to whom he was betrothed.

"I am going to show you something that should interest you," said the Girl unlocking a drawer and taking out a photograph. "This is I—as the California Venus."

Taking the picture from her hand the Young Man glanced at it and laying it down, back upward, rose to his feet and bent upon her a Look!

"What!" she exclaimed—"You think me improper? Gustavus, do you not love me."

"Yes," he replied, "I love you, but also I am an officer of the Society for the Suppression of Vice."

"Spare me; oh, spare me!" the Girl cried, falling on her knees and embracing his."

"Well, yes," he said thoughtfully, possessing himself of his hat and moving toward the door; "I fancy you can be spared."

She sleeps in the valley.—San Francisco Examiner.

The Thrifty French.

The French in a hundred instances have turned the lesser things of this earth to good account. The thrift of a nation which can convert the vermin of its cities into objects of produce is worthy of our admiration, if not of our imitation. The town rat, which of all animals is generally considered the one most outside of our affection, is converted into a useful member of society in the Parisian capital. Here these creatures are collected and placed in the great pond where the carcass refuse of the city is thrown. These remains are quickly demolished by the rats, who leave only untainted skeletons or bones behind them. The demolishers are, in their turn, destroyed themselves. Four times a year a great batteau is effected, and when next the little creatures appear it is in the form of that article of world-wide admiration—the Gant de Paris; indeed, no skin is superior to theirs, the pliability and strength of it rendering it the most suitable for the glove market.—The Hospital.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Steamed Pudding: Two eggs, one cupful of sugar, one cupful of sour milk, one-half teaspoonful of soda, three cups of flour, one cup of fruit if liked; steam two hours. Serve with cream and sugar. I put in raisins unless I have fresh fruit. —Marguerite.

—Cowheel and Mushrooms: Boil, cut up meat, take enough pot liquor for sauce, add one teaspoonful braided flour, twelve button mushrooms, pepper and salt. Stir in, off the fire, yolks of two eggs beaten up with a dash of lemon juice, and strained. Add meat, simmer and serve.

—Rice Croquettes: If you have cold boiled rice left from dinner, heat it over, adding a little milk unless the rice was very moist, and to every cupful of rice allow one egg, well beaten, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, and a piece of butter as large as a hickory-nut. Cook only a moment after the egg is in. When cold, form into croquettes, roll in egg and crumbs, and fry.

—Tomato Sauce: Put one pint of stewed tomatoes over the fire with one onion, bay leaf, a sprig of parsley and a blade of mace, let simmer slowly for ten minutes. Melt three tablespoonfuls of beef fat or cottolene, mix smoothly with one tablespoonful of flour. Press the tomatoes through a sieve, add to the paste, stir continually until it comes to a boil, season with salt and pepper, and serve with chops, fillets or broiled steak.

—Sweet Potato Buns: Three large sweet potatoes, one and a half pints flour, pinch of salt, one and one-half spoonfuls of baking powder, one pint cream. Boil potatoes tender, rub them very fine with cream. Sift together flour, salt and powder; add to potato preparation. Mix into rather firm, smooth dough, form into round pieces size of a small egg. Lay on greased tin and bake in a hot oven twenty minutes.

—Baked Pie-Plant: As a variation from the ordinary stewed sauce made from this vegetable, try the following: Wash and slice the stems as for stewing and put into an earthen or granite baking dish with alternate sprinklings of sugar and a little water, only enough to keep it from burning before the juice starts. Bake it in the oven until very tender, and it will be found a much richer sauce than that made by stewing.

—Cheese Omelet: Break twelve eggs in a bowl and beat lightly for a moment only. Add a cup of milk and two ounces of American or Parmesan cheese grated. Season with salt or pepper. Put in a frying-pan two ounces of butter; when melted pour on the eggs, and when they thicken sufficiently fold in two, and serve immediately. The secret of a good omelet depends mainly on two things—the right heat and that the eggs should be cooked so well on the outside as to bear turning while they are soft on the inside. The omelet must be eaten immediately.

A HOME-MADE TABLET.

How to Make a Convenient Writing Companion.

A pretty and convenient writing tablet may be made at home as follows: Take a board of the required size, cover one side with cambric and the other with felting in any desired color; tan, gray or dull blue are good shades.

Get some thin, narrow strips of filagree brass work which are easily bent, and some brass gimp tacks with small round heads. Then make pockets of the felting of various sizes for postal cards, note and letter paper and envelopes, and tack them on in convenient positions, bordered by the brass grimp.

In the center of the board have a square of blotting paper held in place by corners of the felting tacked on with a border of the brass fillagree. A silver-topped ink-bottle with the glass stand covered with felting should be fastened in place, also a penwiper with pinked edges, and a calendar tacked on with a strip of brass at the top.

The brass strips bent in and out in short curves and fastened to the board also serve to hold penholders, pencil erasers, pen-knives and other accessories of a writing desk. Such a board placed upon a low table, whose top matches in size, painted white, picked out with the color of the felting makes a useful, artistic and inexpensive piece of furniture. If desired thin sheet of leather in dull red or brown may be used to cover the board.—N. Y. World.

Easy Jackets for Afternoon Tea.

Tea-jackets are this season in a class by themselves. A tired woman will often keep on the dusty, heavy dress in which she has taken a long walk rather than change it for one of the elaborate affairs fashionable for teagowns. She might put on a teajacket, through, if she had it at hand—one for instance of pale gray silk, in the Louis XIII. fashion with the skirt sewed on at the waist line. Pale pink silk and white lace should trim the jacket. It should be perfect in fit, and comfortable besides, and the sleeves in particular should be loose all over. For the afternoon tea-drinker who does not fancy wearing light-colored jackets over her dark skirts, one made of dark silk to match her chief dependence in walking costumes will be of service. The heavy point de gene, either white or cream-colored, is pretty and fashionable for trimming black or dark-colored jackets and blouses.—Chicago Times.

In Cozy Style.

An agreeable and popular form of entertainment is a compromise between the old-fashioned afternoon "company" and the modish high tea. Informal invitations are given to a select few for what is known as a thimble tea. The guests, all feminine, assemble about 4 o'clock, each with her bit of fancy work, upon which she is expected to stitch diligently. She must also be prepared to chat. No other form of pastime is prepared besides conversation. The rather slight refreshments are handed about, and the party disperse before one's usual dinner hour.—Chicago Mail.

A Well-Invested Tip.

A correspondent says he had a unique experience in a restaurant the other day. Not having patronized the establishment before, he cautiously "tipped" a waiter before commencing his dinner, and then asked him what he could recommend from the list of dishes figuring on the menu. The waiter pocketed the coin and whispered:

"You want my honest advice, sir?"

"Yes, certainly."

"Well," said the waiter, confidentially, "I should recommend another restaurant."—Drake's Magazine.

Do You Wish the Finest Bread and Cake?

It is conceded that the Royal Baking Powder is the purest and strongest of all the baking powders.

The purest baking powder makes the finest, sweetest, most delicious food. The strongest baking powder makes the lightest food.

That baking powder which is both purest and strongest makes the most digestible and wholesome food.

Why should not every housekeeper avail herself of the baking powder which will give her the best food with the least trouble?

Avoid all baking powders sold with a gift or prize, or at a lower price than the Royal, as they invariably contain alum, lime or sulphuric acid, and render the food unwholesome.

Certain protection from alum baking powders can be had by declining to accept any substitute for the Royal, which is absolutely pure.

ABOUT NEWSPAPERS.

An unhappy father in Dahlonega, Ga., advertises for a wife for his son. He says: "My son is idle and lazy, and the only hope for his welfare is matrimony. A good wife would be apt to make him hustle, or kill him."

One of the most curious papers in Europe—probably in the world—is published in Vienna. Its proprietor is Emperor Francis Joseph, of Austria, who publishes it for his own sole benefit and not for that of the public.

An advertisement in a San Francisco paper, for "the first white child born in California," brought 11,718 letters, each written by a person who claimed that distinction. There are yet a few thousand more "first white children" to be heard from.

A peculiar example of newspaper enterprise under difficulties is offered by the Rhoddesia Chronicle and Advertiser, a Mashonaland (South Africa) paper, which is a foolscap sheet of sixteen pages, not printed on type, but written by hand and duplicated by an office stylograph process.

The most northern newspaper is the Nordkap, published at Hammerfest. The editor and his staff work in a small turf-roofed wooden house. News comes by mail boat and the Hammerfesters are made aware of the world's events generally eight days late, and, as the paper is a weekly, its news is often a fortnight old.

RIPPLES OF LAUGHTER.

"Did the whole company rise and drink Howler's health?" "He didn't say, but I guess they did, for he isn't able to sit up this morning."

"Why does Smithy forbid young Million's calling?" "Because he is very wealthy and he wants his daughter to be sure and fall in love with him."

"I do feel so sorry for that dear little pug dog." "Is Mr. Emptypate cruel to him?" "No; but then just think how an educated dog must feel in such company."

"From what I've been reading I suppose boarding-houses must have been found first in Turkey." "Will you explain why?" "The best variety of prunes grow there."—Inter Ocean.

TO STOP THE PROGRESS of Consumption, you will find but one guaranteed remedy—Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. In advanced cases, it brings comfort and relief; if you haven't delayed too long, it will certainly cure. It doesn't claim too much. It won't make new lungs—nothing can; but it will make diseased ones sound and healthy, when everything else has failed.

The scrofulous affection of the lungs that's caused Consumption, like every other form of Scrofula, and every blood-taint and disorder, yields to the "Discovery." It is the most effective blood-cleanser, strength-restorer, and flesh-builder that's known to medical science. In all Bronchial, Throat, and Lung Affections, if it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

A perfect and permanent cure for your Catarrh—or $500 in cash. This is promised by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

Supremely Delightful

To the emaciated and debilitated invalid is the sense of returning health and strength produced by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. When that promoter of vigor is tested by persons in feeble health, its restorative and vitalizing potency soon evinces itself in improved appetite, digestion and nightly repose, the sole conditions under which strength and nerve quietude is vouchsafed to the human system. Try it and be convinced.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

That the American people will have the wonderful opportunity of mingling with and observing the habits and characteristics of the people of every nation in the world.

That "villages" of the different foreign countries, constructed by and made up entirely of the people direct from such countries, will be a most interesting feature of the fair.

That the American citizen, of whatever foreign birth or parentage, may carry himself back again to the land of his origin by visiting and studying these foreign "villages."

That a few days or weeks spent at the world's fair will be worth years of travel.

That this is the grandest opportunity the American people have ever had for interesting study and pleasure, and that a trip to Chicago during the next six months will be the event of a lifetime.

--The Delano Cornet Band is to go to Rockford, for the 4th. Our neighbors were fortunate in securing the services of so fine a band. They are a good looking lot of boys and can play some pretty pieces, in the latest style. We predict that the Rockfordites will be pleased with their music.

—A short but lively runaway occurred on Saturday, the team started near the town pump ran toward the river, along the R. R., until they came to the switch, one going each side leaying the wagon. The horses separated and ran down River Street when they were caught. Another runaway also occured this week. People should be more careful.

The programme is to be published in the Eagle and Gazette. Another meeting will be held at the City Hall, at 8 p. m., on Saturday, June 17. Be on hand and do your share towards celebrating our Nation's Birthday.

—The silly Buffalo Gazette, last week, gave a pretended interview between two grangers and the publisher of the EAGLE. If our neighbor would have told the truth it would have sounded altogether different, but then that would not have answered his purpose. By the way, every time the Doctor and his kids say anything about the EAGLE and its editor and publisher they give evidence that they are budding out into robust and real silly liars.

This is the Eagle's comment on our publication of a funny story in last week's GAZETTE, given us as we stated, "by a Vice President of the Washington's Birthday Association of Delano, who hails from the country and thinks he knows enough to plant corn." The three Grangers represented as taking part in the dialogue are three of the wealthiest farmers in this vicinity; men whose reputation for truth and veracity, so far as we have learned in an acquaintance of nearly a score of years, has not been questioned. (We are sorry the other party to the dialogue has not been able to emulate their example in the same direction.) Knowing the folly of his attempting to dispute the story as given us by the horny handed son of toil, he resorts to the subterfuge of cowards and seeks by insinuations to attribute the authorship to our boys, in his usual slurring manner, or to ourself, who submitted a proof to our informant who said the article that has so ruffled the old bird's feathers was substantially correct. Oh no! Mr. Gutzwiller, not this time. Mrs. Dewey was elected to assist Prof. Dewey half the time each day. Prof. Dewey and wife to receive $100. per month; other teachers $40, each. Mr. Carlson was employed at $25 per month as Janitor. The employing of a fifth teacher will aid our school as much as anything that can be done. It will allow the Principal half the time for visiting other departments, and acquainting himself with the teachers and pupils from the primary department up. This is one of the greates advancements for the interest of our school that the board has made for years, and we heartily compliment them for it and hope the plan will be a success.

The Wayerly Tribune of last week bears down a little hard on our citizens for neglecting to provide entertainment for the members of the band present, from a distance, at the late Band Tournament.

I. P. Harvey, one of Rockford's old reliable Democrats was over on Fair Day. He thinks the Sherman Silver bill should be repealed and that the McKinley bill is not benefiting any body about here.

The Eagle thinks the Grand Jury might have gone further back in its investigations, according to current reports it would have found a lot of old "Eagle bills" not in accord with prices where there was competition instead of collusion.

The Eagle wastes about a third of a column of her editorial space this week over the "so called" report of the Grand Jury. The principal thing, apparently, that ails it for her, is that William Ziebarth was a member. It is the generally expressed belief among those best calculated to know that the Grand Jury was an exceptionally good one.

The five deputies selected to aid Sheriff Carpenter at the present term of court are said to be a fine looking and efficient set of officials. But as there is but a single criminal, and he is under bonds to appear, it is a question if it is not taking a "cannon to kill a flea" for the county to pay $3, per day for five assistants to the Sheriff, $15 per day during the term.

The Waverly Tribune tries to console post office aspirants with the hope that when the "four year terms of the present incumbents have expired "they will be given the prizes for which they seek. Does not the Tribune known that some of the Republicans have already held over four years? According to this doctrine Delano will have to wait nearly four years more, as our present incumbent has started in on his second term. From good authority we learn that there is no such thing in fourth class post office affairs as an established term, of any length.

The school book question is beginning to warm up along the line. Agents are pestering the school boards awfull. Be on your guard. Look up the matter carefully. Don't make any foolish bargains. Dont buy any cheap books at high prices. Don't buy any unless you need them. Don't take the mere say so of any one for it. You are elected to look after the interests of your respective districts. Attend to your business. Examine into the matter and do the thing that is best. School books should be well bound and well priated and contain fit material to place before the children in such a way that they can and will learn what will aid them through life.

Six indictments were found against blind piggers of Cokato.

Town of Middleville vs. Michael Gebhard, For support of brother, defend't not having been notified. Jury discharged.

C. M. Buck vs. Garr, Scott & Co. Commission for selling steam thrasher. For Defendant.

M. C. O'Donahoe and Bridget O'Donahoe his wife were permitted to adopt as their child, Charles Mabuse, son of August Mabuse.

T. Kelly vs. G. N. R'y. suit for damage. Jury disagreed.

THE MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

Again Looking After the Alum and Ammonia Baking Pwoders.

[St. Paul Pioneer Press.]

A bill for an act in relation to the manufacture and sale of baking powders, to prevent fraud and preserve the public health has been introduced in the Legislature at St. Paul. The bill is intended to prevent the adulteration of baking powders with Alum or Ammonia, imposing proper penalties to enforce the law, etc.

This shows an earnest desire on the part of our State represeutatives to protect their constituents.

The Chicago Tribune, refering to the question of legislation on Alum Ammonia baking powders, says: "It deals in a direct manner with an evil that must be cut down."

Dr. Chas. W. Drew, chemist for the Minnesota State Dairy and food commission, in his elaboraie report of 1892, gives a list of one hundred and seventy three different brands of Alum baking powders alone sold in Minnesota.

Following is a list of the more widely known brands that Dr. Drew, as well as other chemists of high standing have examined and found to contain Alum, and some of which contain both Alum and Ammonia. Many of the Alum and Ammonia powders are labled and advertised as "absolutely pure" to mislead the public.

"Calumet," "Forest City," "Grant's Bon Bon," "Hotel," "Globe," "Puritan," "Snow Ball," "Government," "Palace," "Loyal," "Columbia," "Home," "Monarch," "Unrivaled" "Chicago Yeast," "Echo," "Zipp's Crystal," "Perfection," "White Rose," "Hatchet," "Crown,"

In addition to the above list, there is a multitude of brands sold with a prize. It is safe to reject all baking powders sold with a prize as the tests show they are composed largely of Alum and cost but a few cents a pound. Also refuse any baking powder sold for 25 cents a pound or less, it is shure to contain Alum.

Shucley nothing but their cheepness could induce the public to experment with these impure powders at the risk of health. Aside from the question of the health or wholesomeness of the condemed powders, and viewed from this standpoint of economy alone, a pure cream of tarter baking powder like Dr. Price's from its greater known strength and unquestioned purity will prove more economical to the user in every way.

THE WAY OF THE WORLD.

The whole world loves the modest man
Whether he be great or be small,
But yields up its plunks in great big chunks
To the man with a surplus of gall.

The whole world loves the quiet man,
Who's as silent all day as the owls,
But it's needless to mention that it gives its attention
To the fellow who gets up and howls.

The whole world loves the peaceful man,
Who sees no occasion to bicker,
But the full right of way, you'll permit me to say,
It gives to the strenuous kicker.

Bissell Looking for Relief.

WASHINGTON, June 9.—Postmaster General Bissell today expressed the belief that it would be a great advantage if some plan could be devised that would result in practically placing the power of selecting fourth class post masters in the hands of the people of the various localties, thus affording much needed relief to the officers of the postoffice department and representatives in congress from the personal importunities of applicants for these positions.—St. Paul Globe.

A number of regattas will be given. the Great Northern has a double traced line to the lake and runs frequent trains.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

THE OLD SCHOOL EXHIBITIONS.

O, the old school exhibitions! will they ever come again.
With the good, old-fashioned speaking from the girls and boys so plain?
Will we ever hear old "Iser," with its rapid roll and sweep,
And "Pilot, 'tis a fearful night; there's danger on the deep?"

Sweet Mary doesn't raise her lambs like Mary did of old;
There fleece is not "as white as snow"; they're wandering from the fold.
The boy upon "the burning deck" is not one-half as fine—
He was not "born at Bingen, at Bingen on the Rhine!"

The girls don't speak in calico, the boys in cotton jeans;
They've changed the old-time dresses 'long with the old-time scenes;
They smile and speak in ancient Greek; in broadcloth and in lace;
And you can't half see the speaker for the collar 'round the face!

O, the old school exhibition! it is gone forever more!
The old school house is deserted, and the grass has choked the door;
And the wind sweeps 'round the gables, with a low and mournful whine
For the old boys "born at Bingen—at Bingen on the Rhine!"

HON. CHARLES H. BENEDICT, of St. Paul, has been appointed consul at Cape Town, Africa, by the President. He was 4th of July orator at Delano, two years ago.

DONNELY AND FISH seem to be about all the big potatoes left in the People,s party barrel. And they are being so fearfully shaken up, week after week, that it looks as if one or both must soon be entirely shaken out.

How many people would like to have their names recorded in history as having died on Sunday while attending the World's Fair in Chicago, by some catastrophy overtaking the multitude openly violating the command to "Remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy."

CHIEF JUSTICE FULLER has decided not to interfere with the opening of the fair at Chicago on Sunday. It would look better to most people if a day of rest was observed. Several foreigh countries have set an example by closing their departments on the Sabbath day. Let us follow their example.

THE Sherman law requiring the payment of gold from the United States Treasury for piles of filver bullion to store up in the Treasury is fast ridding our Government of the yellow metal, and as time goes on it comes still nearer to bankrupting the United States Treasury, so far as gold is concerned. The sooner some change is made in the business the sooner the gold stringency will cease to exist.

IT IS to say the least amusing to read the articles in some of the redhot Republican newspapers trying to lay the blame for all the low prices, and hard times to the democrats. Didn't the republican's have full control of all branches of the government for the past four years? And didn't they pass the crowning act of their lives, the McKinley bill? And didn't they give us the John Sherman Silver bill? And aint their effects being felt? And hasn't Grover Cleveland announced his intention of calling Congress together early in September and of laying before them, in one of his concise and characteristic addresses the situation of affairs? And won't the Democrats then try their hands at making some laws to their liking?, and aint a majority of the people with them? And want peace and prosperity follow the enactments of these laws?

MAYOR EUSTIS, of Minneapolis, appears to have scored a point when he so precipitately and satisfactorily squelched the street car difficulty in Minneapolis. It seems the street car company wanted their employees to sign contracts, binding themselves to become responsible for damages that might occur on their beats. This the employees didn't feel inclined to sign, and went to work to organize a labor society to fight such injustices, and quit work. The mayor grasped the situation and headed the delegation of working men and informed the moguls that their company would loose its charter if cars were not run for a period exceeding 24 hours. This brought the company to time. Then some of the hot headed ones wished to organize the labor society and make it a little warmer for the company. Then the mayor suggested that there was no time for this now, the cars must move and he wanted to ride on the first one put in motion, The cars began to move, the mayor got his ride and a difficult problem was solved and the mayor received the praise due him for his wise and timely course in suppressing what threatened to be a big row.

WRIGHT county, in common with counties in Minnesota contains many people who came from foreign lands, years ago, and have built themselves homes, here, in, to them a strange land, among people who, like themselves, left their homes, and came to this new country, from some other kingdom, empire, or republic. In some neighborhoods are to be found Germans, Frenchmen, Swedes, Norwegians and others who live in the same school district, and who are unable to converse with each other in their mother tongues. These people have nearly all learned to talk the language of our land; the language used in our courts, in our schools, in business circles, and all over our country. They can transact business in English. Many have learned to read and write English and thus they have lived mostly to themselves speaking their own language at home, and with their fellow country men wheresoever they meet; and using the language of their adopted country only when obliged to communicate with those who could not understand them unless they spoke English. These people have been here for a quarter of a century. They have raised families. Our country can boast as many young men and young women as any place of its size and population in the country. Most of these have been sent to school, have learned to talk English fluently, and to read and write it well. Some adhere to the old ways and take papers their fathers took before them, and exclude English papers from their households. This is not altogether right. Every family should have its English paper. Should have the home news, in English, before the children. Should teach the young to read up on items of interest, and fit them for taking part in the affairs of life and of government. Here every male 21 years of age can vote. Can take part in electing officers to take care of the affairs of the country. And every one of the voters should discharge his duty faithfully. Should read, and study into the questions to be decided by the ballot. Should know for himself how he wants to vote on every question and what man he wishes to have in office and help all he can to have good schools, and good road bossess, and good men for every position of trust and profit in our land. If you do not now take an English paper subscribe at once. Get one for your family to read. Any of our county papers can be had for one dollar per year; 2cts a week. Don't go hungry for reading matter.

Prices are Artificially Kept Up.

WASHINGTON, JUNE 1st,—The fact that a firm of New York bankers was reported to have had an order for $1,000,000 in gold last week, which they did not fill, and the further fact that there have been no demands for gold for shipment this week, have caused the financial experts here to argue that there is a brighter outlook ahead for the financial situation. Secretary Morton, of the department of agriculture, gives an explanation of the change in the situation which isprobably the correct one.

"I was in Chicago last week," he said, "when there were three bank runs in progress. I went into the office of one of the biggest commission houses there and watched the crowd from the windows. There were thousands of people blocking the sidewaks, all eager to draw out their deposits. My friend said that it was the worst day in Chicago he had ever seen, and he at once ordered one of his clerks to sell 300,000 bushels of wheat at any price he could get. In 30 minutes the clerk had returned and five minutes later payments to the amount of $90,000 had been made on account and deposited to help out one of the banks. That afternoon I was told that more wheat for export had been sold in Chicago that day than in six months before. The average price delivered in Liverpool was about 77½ cents. Next day the price of exchange were raised in London and the orders to buy gold was revoked, because instead of gold we were sending great cargoes of wheat to Liverpool. In other words, the United States, had through the money stringency here, met the prices of the Argentine and Australian wheat growers with the result of checking the outflow of gold, and I think that this indicates that a money stringency in this country which forces prices down so that we can compete with other grain growing countries in English markets, is, after all, better than a redundant currency which keeps up values artificially and prevents us from selling our grain in European markets. We have too much currency and that is one of the troubles with the financial situation to day.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 16, 1893.

President Cleveland is deeply interested in the efforts that are being made to ascertain if the carelessness of any person was responsible for the horrible tragedy in Ford's old theatre, which killed 21 and injured sixty-odd clerks in the Records and Pensions office of the War Department, although he has wisely refrained from taking any action that might be considered as interfering with the properly-constituted authorities now engaged in that task. Great pressure is being brought to bear on him to suspend or remove Col. Ainsworth, the army officer who is at the head of that office and upon whom a great many people are disposed to place the blame, but Mr. Cleveland's idea of fair play is such that it is not probable that he will take any action until there is more tangible evidence of Col. Ainsworth's guilt than public clamor for making him a scapegoat. If he be guilty surely that fact can hardly escape the coroner's jury now investigating and the army court of inquiry which will take the matter up at the close of the inquest.

The improvement in the financial situation has been very marked during the last few days, and Treasury officials and others who keep close watch on financial affairs believe that the turn has come in the flow of gold abroad and that the situation will continue to improve. It is certain that the gold in the Treasury is again increasing at a gratifying rate and that there is at present no demand for gold for shipment abroad. Secretary Morton expresses the opinion that from now on our cereals willl take the place of the gold which we have been shipping to Europe, and the fact that the large amount of gold which the Rothchilds contracted to furnish Austria has all been delivered is also thought to have been a factor in causing a cessation in the European demand for gold.

The Government has lost in actual cash, according to Secretary Carlisle's figures, in carrying out the provisions of the Sherman silver law, nearly $11,000,000 representing the difference between the amount paid for the silver now stored in the Treasury vaults and its present selling price. If it really had to be sold at once the loss would probably be much greater because of the further depreciation in price that would follow such a large quanity of silver on the market.

Among the consular appointments made this week was that of Bennington R. Bedle, of New Jersey, to be Consul at Sheffield, England in place of Benjamin Folsom, resigned. Mr. Folsom, who has held the position since his appointment early in the first Cleveland administration, is a cousin of Mrs. Cleveland's and as "Cousin Ben," he figured in all the republican papers as proof that President Cleveland was not in earnest when he declared himself opposed to nepotism. Wonder what those same fellows will say now that Mr. Folsome has voluntarily resigned? The chances are that will ignore it entirely and say nothing.

Secretary Carlisle has, in one respect a lead of all the other heads of departments. Since taking charge of the Treasusy he has replaced more than 200 republican officials, outside the classified service, with good democrats.

Democratic Congressmen, after a hard and stubborn fight, have succeeded in convincing Postmaster General Bissell that his rule against the removal of republican fourth-class postmasters who have served four years or more, unless charges are filed against them, is a bad one, and it will be replaced by democrats just as fast as they can be got at in Mr. Maxwell's office.

A letter received by Mr. Cleveland this week furnishes conclusive proof, if proof were needed of the wisdom of the establishment in the Pension Bureau of a Board of Revision, the sole duty of which is to go over all the pensions that have been granted under the law of 1890 and determine whether they were granted in accordance with a proper construction of that law. The writer of this letter Mr. J. M. Burnett, is an exemploye of the office, who voluntarily resigned during the last administration because he could not conscientiously take part in carrying out Raum's methods. He tells the President of a large number of pensions illegally granted, and gives statements that may be easily verified. He says that thousands of pensions have been illegally granted, and that they are not confined to cases in which the law was wrongfully construed, but include an enormous number granted in direct violation of law. Mr. Burnette concluded by expressing the belief that at last $50,000,000 a year can be saved by a thorough and rigid purging and revision of the pension rolls.

The Minneapolis Tribune has entered the Educational arena in a way that will put a first class library in the home of every man who wishes to avail himself of the opportunity.

The Encyclopedia Britannica, which consists of 25 large volumes and contains 22,000 pages, is recognized as the standard authority on all subjects.

Everybody knows what this great work is. It treats on every topic under the sun, so that you know if you have it, that when you want to know about any subject, any country, any prominent man, any thing, you have only to turn to this work and in short time you know as much about it as anybody.

It is conceeded by all who own it to be the most indispensable work in their library, in fact a complete library within itself.

But the price which has been heretofore from $125 to $200 for the set has prevented most men from owning it.

It remained for the Tribune to place this useful work in the reach of every man. They have arranged with the publishers for an entire edition of the work, and have not only reduced the price to one fourth of what it has been, but we also deliver it to every man who really desires to own it, and give him the privilege of paying for it at the rate of ten cents a day; so that for the price of two car fares or cigars a day you may place a liberal education within your reach, and the reach of every member of your family, and thus make your home the equal of any public library in the land, so far as the facts in history, the discoveries of science and the practical information of the World are concerned.

You will also be presented with a useful Dime Savings Bank free.

CHINA makes a poor show in the journalistic world. For all its 400,000,000 inhabitants it has only twenty-four newspapers, ten of which are daily and fourteen appear at longer intervals.

RUSSIA'S 100,000,000 people have 753 newspapers and the majority of those are under the ban of the censors. The 65,000,000 people of the United States have 18,531 newspapers and they are all free and untrammeled.

TIMES are hard in Central America and the people cannot indulge in their favorite luxuries. President Ezeta, of San Salvador, thinks that owing to the backwardness of the crops there will be no more revolutions this year.

A GERMAN authority asserts that writer's cramp may be avoided by holding the pen or pencil so that the movements take place at the brachio-carpal articulation, but the new reporter says he thinks he'd rather run his chances as to the cramp.

THE emperor of Russia has purchased for £500, through agents in Copenhagen, two rare antique chests, one dated 1619, both curiously carved. It may be remarked that the Meriden (Conn.) manufacturers of antiques have a branch house in Copenhagen.

SECRETARY BOLLES, of Hartford, cites the case of one young man who entered college with only forty-four cents in his possession, paid expenses and a debt of $115 and came out $266 ahead upon his graduation. If the college were a private business that hustler would own it before this.

IT is stated that the colored people of the United States support seven colleges, seventeen academies and fifty high schools, in which there are 30,000 pupils. They have 1,500,000 children in the common schools and 24,000 teachers. More than 2,500,000 of the race can read and write.

A PREVENTIVE of colds is said to have been discovered in the new paper stockings now made in Germany. The material they are formed of is specially prepared paper, impregnated with some substance which apparently sucks up all perspiration as quickly as it is formed, keeping the feet warm and dry.

THE number of inhabitants of New York state, according to the New York Sun, is greater than the aggregate population of Connecticut, West Virginia, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Delaware, Florida, Oregon, Utah, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Washington, Wyoming, New Mexico, Arizona and Idaho.

A YOUNG lady at Hoboken, N. J., married against the wish of her father, and wore on the occasion a gift of her dead mother. The irate parent swore out a warrant charging larceny, and the young woman was arrested and taken from the room where the ceremony had just been performed. No one can wonder why she marrried to please herself.

A MILL owner not long ago issued the order that the girls in his employ should not wear laced shoes. The reason that he gave was that each one's boots became untied at least five times a day and took at least five seconds to retie. When these twenty-five seconds were multiplied by three hundred—the number of girls in his employ—the loss of time was, he said, too serious to submit to.

GOV. MCGRAW, of the state of Washington, "went west" eight or ten years ago, arriving in San Francisco with forty-two dollars in his pocket. He sent forty dollars home to his wife, and began his western life as a horse-car driver. He made his way to Seattle, where he became sheriff, hotelkeeper and lawyer, and finally one of the most prosperous and popular men in the new state. He is about forty years old.

DR. ELISHA KANE was the most famous of the Arctic explorers and will long live in the story of his thrilling adventures. He died many years ago, but his widow still survives and the closing scenes of her life are among the saddest and most squalid surroundings. Recently she was taken from a colored tenement house in New York city to an insane asylum, crazed as the result of years of indulgence in strong drink. She was one of the famous Fox sisters, whose "spiritual rappings" won them fortune and notoriety.

THE bureau of statistics in Washington says that from the close of the revolutionary war until 1820 only one-quarter of a million strangers came into the United States; from 1820 to 1856 there came altogether 4,212,624 immigrants, of whom about 3,400,000 came to settle, while the others were mere visitors or sojourners. During the 36 years, 1856-1892, the number of immigrants has risen to the enormous total of 12,371,959; so that altogether, during the century, about 16,000,000 aliens have arrived in the United States to help build up the country.

THE New York Times says: "Edwin Booth had fulfilled his mission in life. It would therefore be vain obituary praise to say of him that the loss of his influence will be detrimental to the American dramatic stage. Yet, as a matter of fact, he achieved a remarkable work. Almost alone, for he had no formidable competitors in the last half of his career, he kept tragedy and the old traditions of poetic drama living on the American stage long after they had given place to something different in England. He was not the first of a new race of actors, but the last of a dying race. He was the last of the tragedians."

THE statistics of last year's suicides in Paris show that fifty boys and twenty-one girls under the age of 15 regarded the game of life as not worth the candle and killed themselves. The greatest predisposition to self-murder, or to euthanasia, according to the point of view, among the male suicides of the French capital was between the ages of 50 and 60, at which time of life 2,008 men took their lives. Most of the women who committed suicide did so after they had passed 60, a fact that seems strange, for among English-speaking people the largest percentage of women suicides is among the young.

FLAME-SWEPT.

Forest Fires in the Mesaba Iron Range Cause Losses Aggregating More than $1,000,000—Towns Almost Entirely Destroyed—An Army of 4,000 Homeless People—Loss of Life Reported.

DULUTH, Minn., June 20.—Accurate information regarding the Mesaba range fire is now available. At Virginia there are thirty-two buildings still standing and 340 were burned. At Mountain Iron there were six buildings burned. At Biwabik the damage was slight. Merritt has sixteen houses left.

There are on the range about 3,600 people homeless, many of them without food or clothing. The fire is still burning furiously in the forests and all about the towns that are left, but unless the wind changes they are not in danger. Duluth will care for all the sufferers. It has been decided not to appeal for outside aid.

Small fires are burning all along the range still and a change of wind will cause more damage, but the danger is not imminent. The mining companies suffered heavily. The camps at the plants of the following mines were either entirely or partially destroyed; Shaw, Commodore, Franklin, Jones, Mesaba, Mountain, Ohio, Rouchleau, Burke and New England. The Minnewas mine escaped and the Wyoming has not been heard from.

The total loss as nearly as it can be estimated is in the neighborhood of $1,100,000. The insurance will not exceed $400,000 and may fall short of that sum. The losers are so scattered and everything is in such confusion that no details of loss or insurance can be obtained.

Every effort is being made here to prevent suffering among the hundreds of homeless people. General public meetings were held Monday and a general relief committee organized. This committee has now in its hands about $6,000 and a great quantity of clothing and provisions. The greater portion of the women and children from Virginia are in Duluth.

Several persons are believed to have perished at Virginia. A local physician found bones of an adult male and female in the debris of one of the houses, but there is too much confusion and the people are too widely scattered to make it possible to check up or locate any that may be missing. A man and horse are also said to have been burned at the Lone Jack mine. W. G. Taylor, of Virginia, was badly burned, but is still alive.

Trouble is feared at Virginia from the character of the population. As in all new mining towns, the men are many of them hard charactars, and lawlessness is anticipated.

The first train bearing the refugees from the range, carrying 250 people, mostly women and children, arrived in Duluth at 1:30 a. m., and the wearied and hungry passengers hurried from the coaches to the baggage-rooms, where elaborate lunches were spread. Of all the crowd the greater portion was penniless, dependent absolutely upon what charity might be offered. Few had saved anything beyond the most meager effects, and for the whole train load there was but one trunk.

A most graphic description of the fire at Virginia was given by James McCarthy, an actor, who had been playing at the Star theater. He was accompanied by his wife and a little child. He said:

"The fire had been burning about Virginia for several days, but no one else seemed to worry, so we did not. Saturday night we were called out to fight the fire, but it was easily got under control. Sunday morning it was worse and the town was almost surrounded by fire. About 2 o'clock the wind, which had been rising all the morning, began to blow a perfect gale and houses on the edge of the town began to burn. People went mad. They attempted at first to save everything and began moving furniture. Then they tried to save lighter articles, but as the fire grew fiercer they were glad to save anything and escape with their lives. The town burned like tinder: the light frame buildings were like so much paper. The whole town was in ruins in less than an hour. The terrified people gathered about the Mesaba depot, where the officers of the road were doing everything for their safety. A train of ore cars was backed into the depot and the people loaded in. All the way down we came through a lane of fire."

Similar forest fires are burning over the whole upper Michigan peninsula. So far no towns have been burned, but three days more of the intensely hot and dry weather that has prevailed for the last fortnight will do incalculable damage.

ASHLAND, Wis., June 20.—Forest fires are raging everywhere in northern Wisconsin and have done great damage to standing timber. No rain has fallen for over a month and the fires run through the woods with almost irresistible rapidity. Iron River, a lumbering town 28 miles west of here, was saved Sunday night by strenuous efforts. Only one schoolhouse and six dwellings were destroyed. At last accounts the fire was approaching from the west and the town is again threatened. The village of Sanborn, 10 miles south of this city, was wiped out Sunday, every building being destroyed.

At Moquah John Meagher, a prominent citizen, was burned to death while fighting the fire which destroyed his homestead. Many other fatalities are rumored, but particulars are meager. As everything is dry and hot the worst is feared. Two children, names not known, were burned to death at Sanborn. The Northern Pacific bridge at Minersville is gone and a bridge 300 feet long on the south shore at Sanborn was destroyed. Many freight cars are destroyed. The total property loss is in the millions.

FOUR MEN HELD.

The Verdict of the Coroner's Jury Declares Col. Ainsworth, Contractor Dant, Engineer Sasse and Superintendent Covert to Be Responsible for the Ford Theater Disaster.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—The coroner's jury which has been investigating the Ford theater disaster reached a conclusion Monday afternoon. It holds responsible Col. Frederick Ainsworth, Contractor Dant, Engineer Susse and Superintendent Covert for criminal negligence and manslaughter. The announcement was received with cheers by those who were in attendance at Willard's hall.

After being out two hours the jury returned a verdict, setting forth that Frederick B. Loftus came to his death by the disaster at Ford's theater building on June 9, 1893. They recite the fact that George W. Dant was the contractor under the government for the work in progress which caused the disaster and all the circumstances connected with the accident and find that Frederick C. Ainsworth, in charge of the building, William G. Covert, the superintendent, Francis Sasse, the engineer, and George W. Dant, the contractor, are responsible for the killing of Loftus.

The finding further refers to the absence of shoring or other means to protect the building during the process of excavation, by reason of which one of the piers fell, causing the fall of the floors and the consequent crushing and killing.

The jurors further find that the failure of the government of the United States to provide for skilled superintendence of the work of repair and alteration of its buildings in charge of the war department is most unbusiness-like and reprehensible, and are of the opinion that if such superintendence had been provided in the case of the work on the Ford's theater building the awful tragedy might have been averted.

Coroner Patterson decided not to issue warrants for the commitment of Col. Ainsworth, Dant, Covert and Sasse until this morning in order to give them an opportunity of obtaining bail. Col. Ainsworth has already secured a bondsman. Contractor Dant is very ill at his residence.

SMALL BANKS FAIL.

The Monetary Stringency Causes Institutions in Oregon, Tennessee and North Carolina to Close Their Doors.

ALBANY, Ore., June 20.—The Linn county bank of this city has closed its doors owing to the stringency in the money market. J. L. Cowan, president of the bank, says the deposits amount to about $50,000, and that the assets will exceed the liabilities by about $80,000. J. A. Crawper, the wealtiest citizen in Albany and one of the directors, personally guarantees every depositor. Among the deposits is $33,000 of the county's money.

The Linn county bank at Lebanon also closed its doors at noon. The Bank of Oregon, this city, also closed its doors. Cashier Blaine says the assets are 50 per cent. more than the liabilities. The amount of the deposit is small. Both failures were caused by the steady withdrawal of deposits for several weeks.

WILMINGTON, N. C., June 20.—Owing to the withdrawal of more than $320,000 of deposits and notices of over $150,000 intended withdrawal maturing in a few days and also to its inability to realize quickly upon its assets on account of the stringency of the times the Bank of New Hanover has been forced to make an assignment to Junius Davis in the interest of all concerned. Depositors will receive dollar for dollar. The assets are estimated at $1,250,000; the liabilities, $800,000.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., June 20.—The City savings bank at a late hour Monday night made an assignment. The capital stock is $200,000, all paid in. There is on deposit $225,000. It is claimed the depositors will be paid in full.

TOPEKA, Kan., June 20.—The state bank commissioner has ordered the State bank of Plainville closed. The capital stock is $50,000, but the amount of liabilities is not obtainable. The officers of the bank claim that depositors will be paid in full.

OVERWHELMED WITH DEBT

An Oil Well Supply Company Forced to Make Application for a Receiver.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., June 20.—The Oil Well Supply company, one of the most extensive corporations in Pennsylvania, has gone into the hands of a receiver. The corporation is capitalized at $1,500,000 and its assets aggregate $2,500,000. The total indebtedness is placed at $1,100,000. The debt is pressing and cannot be met and to save a sacrifice of the assets by forced sales and disintegration of the numerous factories and works and preserve the whole plant as a unit the appointment of a receiver was decided upon. The principal offices and iron and pipe mill of the company are located in Pittsburgh. They also have foundries and shops in Oil City, Bradford and other places, and own property in New York, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and West Virginia as well as in Pennsylvania. They employ over 1,500 clerks. President Eaton has issued an address to the public saying the company was prepared if given time to get on its feet again. There will probably be a meeting of the creditors.

Will Be Open Every Night.

CHICAGO, June 20.—It has been decided by the council of administration to keep the world's fair open until 11 o'clock every night. Heretofore it has been open only on Sunday, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday nights, which have been known as "special" nights at the fair.

Will Sue for Damages.

CHICAGO, June 20.—Members of the Illinois Grain Merchants' Protective association complain of serious losses through slow movement of cars and have authorized the railroad commissioner to institute suits for damages.

Fell 100 Feet.

CHICAGO, June 20.—John Thornly fell 100 feet from a scaffolding in the Manufactures building on Monday and was instantly killed. Thornly was one of a gang of painters engaged on the interior of the building and while busy with his work lost his balance and fell from the scaffold with fatal result.

Killed His Father.

NAPOLEON, O., June 20.—Miller P. Long, a farmer, died from the effects of a stab wound inflicted by his 16-year-old son Napoleon, who was arrested. The father had reprimanded the son for not going to work.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Crushed to Death.

Albert Wilkinson, a switchman, was killed in the yards of the Northern Pacific in Minneapolis. As far as could be learned Wilkinson stepped between two cars, when another car war kicked against the train and he was caught between the bumpers and crushed about the abdomen. The body was then thrown to the ground and run over, the wheels passing over his left leg from the hip to the knee, and also over the right leg below the knee. He was horribly mangled, but lived long enough to be taken by the patrol wagon to St. Barnaba's hospital, where he expired a few minutes after his arrival.

Assaulted.

A German, Nick Uhl, who hired out to work for Ringling Bros.' circus, is at Waseca badly wounded about the head and shoulders. He claims that as the circus train was leaving, some of the crew told him to strip his clothes and go to bed, but being suspicious he refused, when they jumped on him, hit him with a bar of iron across the head, robbed him of $3, all he had, and then threw him off the moving train. He managed to crawl to a house near by, and word being sent to the night police, the wounded man was taken to town.

Confederate Bills.

John Jackson, Peter Johnson and John Dodson were arrested in North Minneapolis trying to pass confederate bills for good money. The trio went into a saloon and bought cigars and drinks, tendering the bogus money in payment. The negotiations proved disastrous, for Sergeant Foster and Officers Brudigen and Ellbridge took a hand in the transaction and locked the men in the North Side police station. They are in the employ of Bardwell-Robinson, the sash and door manufacturers.

Got into Trouble.

H. S. Bushawe is in the Hennepin county jail as an outcome of a violation of the law in reference to the issue of imitation money for advertising purposes. Bushawe did not make the money, but he had in his possession the imitation of a $10 bill while going the rounds of the city. There was an attempt made to pass the imitation as current issue of the United States, which failed, and after an examination before the United States commissioner, he was lodged in the county jail to await the setting of the United States grand jury.

After Land.

There was considerable excitement at Duluth when town 67, range 18, was thrown upon the market. About 30 persons slept in the offices and halls adjacent to the land office to be on hand to get as near first chance as possible. Dundas Harlow, an old settler, secured the first place. Thirty-nine applications were received, most of them from bona fide settlers. Of these, 23 were filed under the timber and stone act; 14 declaratory statements were made and two homesteads filed.

A Lucky Man.

John O'Brien, said to be a native of North Dakota, wandered onto the tracks of the St. Louis road, in the vicinity of the First street bridge, near Fourth avenue south, Minneapolis. He did not heed the approach of a Minneapolis transfer train, which struck him and sent him down between the rails. The fates were with O'Brien, who, although 13 cars passed over him, received no other injuries than a severe scalp wound.

Admits the Girls.

At a meeting of the governing board and trustees of Macalester college, it was decided to adopt co-education in that institution. This is quite a radical step, and although the matter has been considered at various times, no definite action favoring co-education has hitherto been adopted. The next question to be considered will be an increase in the accommodations of the college to make room for the additional students who will come in.

To Begin Work.

Assistant Government Engineer DuSchane was in Minneapolis and reported that the work on the two dams and locks between Minneapolis and St. Paul would be commenced in a week or ten days. The total cost of the two dams will not be over $1,000,000, the previous estimate being $2,550,000.

News in Brief.

Mrs. Jennie Jones, wife of E. E. Jones, a barber in the employ of the West hotel barber shop in Minneapolis, committed suicide at the Parker house by taking morphine. Domestic trouble was the cause.

The receipts for May grain inspection amounted to $11,880.90.

Officer Riley, of the St. Paul police force, arrested a burglar who was trying to effect an entrance into the office of L. L. May & Co. On the way to the box the burglar broke away and ran, but was brought down by pistol shot through the arm.

The store and dwelling of Ole Moe at Little Falls was destroyed by fire.

H. F. Heitsch, the old German who has gained some notoriety from his divorce suits at Fergus Falls, left last week for Oregon to get away from his trouble. A dispatch received from Missoula says he was found by the track, dead. It is supposed that he fell from the cars.

The plans of Chas. P. Brown, of Sioux City, Io., have been accepted for the new school house at Pipestone. Red stone and jasper trimmings will be used.

Quinn Bros.' warehouse and contents at Waverly were destroyed by fire.

Harry Barger, the 15-year-old boy arrested several weeks ago for criminally assaulting a 10-year-old girl at Lester Park, pleaded guilty in the court at Duluth to indecent assault.

The Great Northern has increased its capitalization to $45,000,000, of which $25,000,000 is preferred stock. A certificate to this effect was filed in the office of the secretary of state.

Gov. Nelson has issued commissions to Wm. G. Bronson, as lieutenant colonel of the 1st infantry; Wescott W. Price, as major of the same regiment; Julius C. McQuade, as second lieutenant of Company A, 3d infantry; Halvor W. Thune, as second lieutenant of Company I, 3d infantry.

Burglars entered the roller mill at Rush City, knocked the handle off the safe door, put in a charge of powder and blew off the door. At this point they must have become rattled or else their ammunition gave out, for the cash chest door was uninjured and in which was about $150 in checks and currency.

Saved Her Sight

"My little girl Hazel two years ago had the grip, leaving her with inflamed eyes, so bad that for seven months we had to bandage them and keep her in a dark room. The family physician and an oculist said the sight of one eye was destroyed and she might lose the other. She suffered intense pain, and when light was admitted to the room would cry as if burned with a hot iron.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime, and read the Label.

UNLEARNED.

He is lovely just to look at,
With his thoughtful, dark brown eyes,
His gentle face and shining curls—
But he isn't very wise.

Two birthdays he has counted,
Two dimples he can show;
Yet he's ignorant of many things
That little babies know.

Though he talks in childish fashion,
He knows but pretty words,
And he says them in a voice as sweet
As the cooing of the birds.

He smiles at everybody,
But he hasn't learned to fret;
And angry looks and pouts—
He doesn't know them yet.

Oh, everything contents him,
So he's never learned to tease;
And kicks and screams—he's unaware
There are such things as these.

But he's lovely just to look at
And to cuddle and to pet,
For to wriggle out of loving arms
He hasn't learned it yet.

Oh, as at first I told you,
He isn't very wise;
Yet were we all as ignorant,
Earth might be Paradise.

Why Mr. and Mrs. Blummer Never Married Again.

[COPYRIGHTED, 1893, BY THE AUTHOR.]

I.

"IT is plain to me," said Blummer, after he had quarreled with his wife for half an hour over the breakfast table—"it is very plain to me we are quite incompatible!"

"I fully agree with you," retorted Mrs. Blummer, wiping the tears of anger from her pretty brown eyes. "We are not at all congenial!"

"On this point," observed Blummer, icily, "we seem to have no difference of opinion. We were utterly mistaken in ever imagining we cared for each other enough to—"

"You are right," the little woman broke in, determined he should not gain the least advantage. "It was very silly of me, and I shall never cease to regret it."

"I made a blooming idiot of myself," Blummer brutally declared. "But, then, you were a rather pretty and stylish girl when I met you at—"

"Oh, you are really growing complimentary! So I was a rather pretty and stylish girl—when you met me! That was just one year ago. I suppose I have grown old and homely and dowdy in a year! If so, the life I have led with you during the last six months is the cause of it!"

She was growing hysterical again.

"I have done all I could to make you happy, but you are the most unreasonable woman I ever saw. I thought you an angel, but I have found you possess a temper—like—like—a cold chisel. Our married life has been a wretched failure!"

Then he very deliberately attempted to take a drink of coffee from his egg glass.

"There is a remedy for our wretchedness!" exclaimed the little woman, decidedly, a look of resolution on her flushed face.

"Yes," he nodded. "The remedy is separation. It would be a glorious thing to be a free man again."

She leaped to her feet.

"That settles it, Mr. Blummer! I'll not live another day with you after this! I shall enjoy my freedom quite as much as you will. The only thing I dread is the horrible disgrace of being seen in a divorce court."

"You need not worry about that, Mrs. Blummer, unless you wish to marry again, for we can live apart by mutual consent and there need be no divorce. As for me, I shall never marry again."

"Nor I. Once is enough for me! We will separate quietly."

She sat down again and they talked it over, finally arriving at an agreement.

II.

Mrs. Blummer went away to a remote little resort amid the mountains, where she could spend a quiet summer. She stopped at a picturesque old hotel, where she was known as a widow, as it happened she affected black. And a very gay little widow she made, for she was determined to obtain utter forgetfulness in the pleasure to be extracted from the passing moment.

And so it came about that she made the acquaintance of a "perfectly lovely" old doctor who took a great interest in her. He was so very kind and attentive that he seemed like a father to her.

Day after day Mrs. Blummer and the doctor were seen together, and it was not long before the other guests began to gossip mildly about them.

"She is awfully lucky," declared one gushing young thing. "He is really in earnest, and he's so awfully rich! No sensible girl would mind his age, for he's awfully handsome. But it's always the widows who make the lucky catches."

One day the doctor and Mrs. Blummer were alone in a cozy little nook beside the mountain stream, where they had come for the ostensible purpose of fishing. But their rods lay idly on the ground, and they were seated quite near together on the soft moss.

"Mrs. Blummer," said the doctor, securing one of her hands, "I love you, and I want you to marry me. I am a wealthy man, and I will do everything in my power to make you happy."

Her tender brown eyes filled with tears, and she tried to release her hand.

"Doctor, I cannot marry you."

"Why not?"

"I am married already."

Then she told him everything in a frank way that made him feel that he loved her all the more desperately. When she had finished, he said:

"You do not love this man to whom you are bound?"

"No."

"Would you marry me if you were free?"

"I—I think so."

"Then you must obtain a legal separation from him."

III.

Three hundred miles away, Blummer was enjoying himself at the seashore. He met a very charming and beautiful girl, and, by way of diversion, he sought her society as much as possible. One day he came to the conclusion that he was really and truly in love with her.

From that moment Blummer grew rapidly desperate, after the manner of any man who knows his affection is reciprocated yet feels that the situation is hopeless.

One night, as they sat on a huge bowlder and watched the glory of the moonlight on the rippling ocean, he told her how much he loved her, and heard her sweet voice confess a mutual attachment.

Then came the task of revealing the truth, which he did in a manly manner. Of course she was shocked and distressed, but she acknowledged she loved him still.

"Would I were a free man!" he cried. "I can be in a short time," he added, a sudden thought coming to him. "My wife will not oppose a separation. Will you wait for me and marry me then?"

"Yes, dear."

Blummer felt himself the happiest man on earth.

IV.

Mr. and Mrs. Blummer met by appointment. They greeted each other coldly.

"Henry," spoke the little woman,

THEY GREETED EACH OTHER COLDLY.

after some moments of hesitation, "I have come to ask a favor of you."

"And I have come to ask one of you," he said.

"I want you to allow me to obtain a legal separation from you."

"Why, that is the very thing I was going to ask of you. I am willing to give you the necessary grounds, and we can take the case to South Dakota. Everything shall be done as quietly as possible."

Both seemed delighted, and still they eyed each other a trifle suspiciously, as if scenting the truth.

"Why do you wish a separation, Edna?" he finally asked. "I trust you are not contemplating another marriage as soon as this? I believe you said once was enough for you."

She tossed her head defiantly.

"I have no reason to conceal the truth," she replied. "I am contemplating another marriage. I have found an ideal man, and he will make me his wife as soon as proper after the separation."

Blummer felt a twinge of pained surprise, and he fancied his wife had never seemed quite so handsome before.

"I am also going to get married," he acknowledged, finding pleasure in his ability to say so. "I am engaged to a most charming girl who I am confident will make a model wife."

He had arisen, and she sprang to her feet and confronted him, her chin quivering. For some moments they stood looking into each other's eyes, a strange feeling creeping over them.

"Henry Blummer!" she finally sobbed, "you are a brute! I—I did th-think you would have more regard for me than this. If you marry again I'll kill myself!"

Dear little soul! How Blummer longed to take her in his arms and console her!

"But you are going to get married," he protested.

"No, I am not!" she quickly asserted. "I did think of it, but I've changed my mind now. You don't love me a bit, and I am ready to die!"

He couldn't resist longer, so he caught her close to his breast, and she sobbed on his shoulder, making no attempt to get away.

"Edna," he murmured, his mustache close to her shapely little ear; "we have been deceiving ourselves. We care more for each other than for all the rest of the world! We ought to live happily together. Let's try it over again, little wife."

"I am willing, dear."

She lifted her smiling, tear-stained face, and he kissed her dainty mouth.

WILLIAM G. PATTEN.

ON THE OTHER SIDE.

A Contradicting Wife Who for Once Overdid the Thing.

An elderly man had for a wife one of those trying persons who, according to their own ideas, are always in the right, and who make it a point of conscience to prove everyone else in the wrong.

The poor man was never allowed to make any statement without having it instantly disputed by his accurate but irritating spouse. She had acquired such a habit of correcting and contradicting him that she one day made a mistake which gave her suffering husband a chance to laugh at her.

"Do you remember, my dear," he said, in a retrospective mood, "the letter-case embroidered with pearl beads that you made for me with your own hands when we became engaged? It was worn out years ago, but I can still see it very plainly. On one side there was embroidered a beautiful butterfly, and—"

"The butterfly was on the other side," interrupted his wife, in her most decided tone.

And she always complained that Mr. Underfield "was fond of telling stories without any point," whenever he referred to this conversation afterward.—Yankee Blade.

THE DECADENCE OF OUR RACE.

One of the Lessons We Can Learn from the Rise and Fall of Early Civilization.

An English author has just published a book in which he endeavors to prove that the races of men which are now dominant in the world have already began to decay, and that the time is approaching when the subordinate races will rise up and take the place of these decaying races. The English race, both in America and Europe, this writer maintains, has already reached its decadent period. The French and German races, also have attained the summit of their greatness, and hereafter must retrograde rather than advance. The great ruling races of the world, this writer asserts, have had their day, and must now begin to make way for the inferior races, which have hitherto remained in the back ground. In other words the civilized man of today may be the savage of some future generation, and the savage of to-day, sometime in the evolution of the races of men, may come to the front and become civilized. It is a favorite theory with many, that races, like individual men, rise, culminate and decay. That none remain long stationary, and that all are either progressing or retrogressing.

These previously inferior races are the people of South America and the people of Africa. Some one, indeed, has said that no race can reach a high grade of civilization unless it lives in a land where the snow flies. But the history of antiquity disproves this. Nearly all the great nations of the ancient world inhabited warm climates.

It is not probable that if a revolution like this is ever effected it will be effected in one generation, or in one century, or, indeed, in a thousand years. These great racial modifications have been effected many times in the past. But, the change is a process of slow development.

At the beginning of the Christian era the people who inhabited the present countries of Germany, England and France, were merely savage barbarians.

The Roman civilization, which embraced the countries extending along the shores of the Mediterranean sea, was a civilization in many respects of a high order. It was the proudest and most confident civilization the world has ever known. And no subject of Rome in the early days of our Christian era could have been made to believe that the time would ever come when these savage northern nations would lay her pride in the dust.

But yet the Roman empire, the greatest governmental structure ever reared by man, for many centuries, has been no more. It was overrun and conquered by the hardy and savage barbarians of the north.

These savage barbarians have, in their turn, become civilized, and from them has sprung the great modern countries of Europe. The Englishman and American of to-day, the Frenchman, the German, and the Scandinavian are all descendants of men who were barbarians and savages when the old Roman empire was in its vigor.

Roman civilization in its turn replaced Greek civilization—a civilization the highest in many respects that the world has ever seen. Greek civilization supplanted the Persian, and the Persian supplanted the Babylonian and Assyrian.

So, it will be seen, that the world has thus far evolved by the alternations of civilizations. A dominant race is overthrown by a less conspicuous one, which, in its turn, flourishes until it is overthrown by some other less conspicuous race.

And so the process has gone on. Whether it will continue to go on in this way until the end of time, of course, the foresight of man can not determine. But if we reason from the past the argument from analogy is strong that it will so continue.

Of course this is not a pleasant theme for us to contemplate. None of us wish to have our race transformed into a decadent and dying condition.

But the way to avoid this is to make a study of the great empires of antiquity and note the causes that brought on their decay and ruin.

We find that these great nations of ancient times were sapped by luxury and enervated by excesses. Men grew wealthy, luxurious and weak, and lost the strong and sturdy qualities that made their nation dominant. They emasculated themselves by weak, frivolous and vicious indulgencies, and so made themselves easy victims for the northern barbarians, who came down with vigor unvitiated and strength undiminished by excesses. If modern nations do not wish to suffer the fate of the ancient nations, they should be warned by their example and avoid their vices and their follies.

In the meantime let the savage nations of Africa, and the partially barbarous nations of South America, come forward. There may be qualities in these races which no civilization has as yet developed—qualities which have lain dormant for ages, but which, when they have once been developed, will immeasurably help along the progress of the world. Let us hope that these races can advance without the retrogression of any other races.—S. W. Ford, in Yankee Blade.

THE LAW OF THE PLAINS.

Thrilling Account of a Duel to the Death with Knives Fought by the Moon's Light.

"The outfit of twelve wagons had stopped at a point on the Rio Pecos river about seven miles above the town of Anton Chico. We had supper and were smoking our pipes, and it was between sunset and dark when a young fellow about twenty years old came riding up from the direction of the Comanche country. He was dressed like a cowboy, and what few words he spoke were in good English. He rode up to a camp-fire around which five or six of us were sitting, and after a 'Good evening' to all dismounted and let his gaze wander from man to man.

"Teamster No. 5 was a Mexican half-breed known as Big Pete. He gave a start of surprise as the stranger rode up, and I heard him cursing and muttering to himself. By and by the boy fixed his gaze on Pete and kept it there for a long half minute. There was a sort of smile on his face which made one think of the look of a wolf who has pursued his victim for hours and hours and was finally near enough to seize it.

"'Rifle, pistol or knife?' he queried of Pete in a low, even voice.

"The big fellow looked around uneasily. He was no coward, as we all knew, but the sudden appearance of the boy had rattled him for a moment. A full moon was coming up, and there would be light enough for firearms. He was a good shot, but that long, sharp knife was his favorite weapon. Besides, he was a giant compared to that slender but active-looking youth.

"'The knife, and I will give you one minute to say your prayers!' shouted Pete as he sprang up.

"'Very well; just as you please,' quietly replied the young man, as he unbridled his horse and sent him away.

"Not a word was spoken by any of the rest of us. We all rose up, but made no other move. Not a question was asked of either man. It was the law of the plains. One man had the right to demand satisfaction of another by rifle, revolver or knife. As to the cause of the quarrel, why should we ask or care? Pete removed his belt and jacket and sombrero and tied a handkerchief around his head. The stranger removed the belt in which he carried a couple of revolvers, threw aside his sombrero, and walked off to a distance of fifty feet. Pete followed. Every man in camp formed a circle about the pair. The moon made everything as plain as daylight. The horses and mules were all to the right of us. So far as all could see every one stopped feeding and gazed steadfastly at the circle.

"'Ready!'

"It was the stranger who called out, and at the word both moved into the center of the ring and menaced each other. A fight to the death with knives is a horrible thing to look at, and yet there is a magnetism about it which forces you to stand and look till the end comes. Boxers move about—feint—advance—retreat—rush at each other and grapple. So it is with men who fight with knives. Back and forth across the circle—round and round it—their knives now and then clashing together, and it was ten long minutes before blood was drawn. With the first drop came death.

"No man called out. No man in the circle moved out of his tracks. Some of the horses came nearer and whinnied softly, as if asking what it was all about, but this we remember afterward. Big Pete was working to make his great strength bring him an advantage. If he could seize that boy's right arm with his left hand and hold it for five seconds the duel would be ended. Thrice he attempted it and thrice he failed. Suddenly the boy found the opening he had been seeking. So swiftly that none of us could follow him he sprang forward under the uplifted right arm, there was the flash of a knife, and Big Pete uttered a groan and sank down.

"'You are witnesses that it was a fair fight,' said the stranger as he bent over Pete and looked around the circle.

"It was fair, but no man answered. He called his horse by a low whistle, slipped on the bridle, and half a minute later was cantering away to the east. Big Pete had wronged him. The law of the land would not give him satisfaction. The law of the plains had avenged him. A grave beside the Pecos—a guess or two at the stranger's identity—and that was all."—Chicago Times.

FRENCH CANADIANS.

Characteristics of Those Who Emigrate to Our Cities.

The French Canadian is not a good farmer in the modern sense. He does not renew his lands, nor is he partial to new methods. Moreover, he is not enterprising. If he must quit the ancestral domain, he prefers to go to the city, where he can find employment in a factory or a workshop. He is industrious, sober, frugal and skillful, a most excellent mechanic, a cunning carpenter, and a faithful and contented subordinate. He leaves the country because he has heard from his compatriots who have gone before him that he can do better in the states.

His taxes are heavy, and his opportunities of making enough to pay them and to maintain himself and his family in comfort are small. The cure is good to him, but the church and the presbytery are too big and the schoolhouse is too small. It may be that some of his children will receive the meager education furnished by the parochial schools, but he can not hope that all will be instructed, and it is quite possible that none may be lucky enough to have any schooling. In the states things are so much better that Jacques, who used to live on the next farm, but who is now working in a mill at Lowell, comes back once a year to visit his brother, decked with a chain, with a velvet waistcoat, his wife wearing a silk dress, while all his children are at school. So the burdened Canadian goes away, and there is another voter lost and another parishioner less.—Henry Loomis Nelson, in Harper's Magazine.

As an Example.

The man in No. 48 was decidedly hilarious and had been so until three o'clock a. m., when the man in No. 46 got out of bed and went down to see the night clerk.

"By gum," he exclaimed as soon as he landed in the office, "what the dickens is the matter with that chap in the room next to me? He's been raising Billy be-dad in there for four hours and I can't sleep a wink."

"Aw' that's all right," exclaimed the clerk, "he's a friend of ours and he's only on a little toot."

"Well, you put me in another room about half a mile away, will you? And say," he added, as the clerk called the watchman, "when he get's through with that toot, let me have it, won't you? I get a little happy myself sometimes and catch Hail Columbia for it, and I want to take that toot home with me, so's my wife can get some idea what a man can do when he tries right hard."—Detroit Free Press.

The Indian Hornbill.

A hornbill is something like a big magpie in all its sly tricks and ways. It catches a little ball of food, if thrown to it, with a sharpness and precision worthy of a cricketer. On one occasion, when Mrs. Hornbill had made herself a nest in a hollow in the trunk of the tree in their house and deposited her eggs in it, Mr. Hornbill came and plastered up the opening with mud, leaving only a space sufficient for him to insert his bill and feed the female and the nestlings. He feeds them in a very affectionate manner, by throwing up from his own stomach pellets of food, enveloped, something like a sausage in "gizzard sacs" formed of portions of the interior lining of his own stomach. This is perhaps more curious than nice.—Longman's Magazine.

—He read the letter twice and then said: "This is one of the most moving pieces of literature I ever saw." "Is it an appeal for aid?" asked his wife. "No. It's a note from the landlord saying he has raised the rent."—Washington Star.

MUTTON CHOPS.

FREQUENT change of pasture should be given and anything which conduces to the comfort of the fleecy beauties.

SHEEP farming has an advantage over dairying in balancing up the work of the year more evenly. If it increases the winter work it makes less to do in summer.

THE mutton maker who lives near town may be able to sell readily at the right price, but he must contend with the town dogs, which is no slight disadvantage.

ON the right track is the man who enlarges his flock by adding to it a full-blooded and high-priced buck. A choice buck lamb can be bought in the spring at a low price, and reared as easily as any other.

A LANE leading to the pastures from the yard or fold is a good thing. The sheep can be taught to come up at night and need only have the gate opened in the morning, when they will go to feeding without having further time spent on them.

THE GREAT NORTHWEST.

Its Remarkable Development Shown by a World's Fair Exhibit.

The Transportation building at the World's Fair is the most interesting feature of the great exposition to all persons interested in the development of the United States. It contains a complete exhibit of the latest railway appliances as well as the quaint locomotive and stage coaches of the past. The Northern Pacific railroad went a step further than other transportation companies when it resolved to show two elegant cars, especially built for the purpose, containing samples of products gathered from the states of Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon. The company was, no doubt, prompted to make this display because the completion of its transcontinental line made the development of the states named possible. Had it not been for the enterprise and pluck of the originators and managers of the Northern Pacific railroad, North Dakota, Montana, Idaho and Washington would still be frontier territories inhabited by Indians and wild beasts, instead of being progressive and prosperous commonwealths. The products exhibited by the seven states are handsomely arranged and include all kinds of grains in the straw; threshed grains and seeds, fruits and berries; wild and cultivated grasses; ores, woods, iron and coal; precious metals and stones; hops, tobacco and flax; flour, wool and fish; tanning bark and tanning acid; marble, building stone, potter and brick; aerated, dried, preserved and canned fruits; vegetables, petrified woods, fine mineral specimens, etc., etc. In the season of fresh apples, pears, plums, cherries, peaches, prunes, grapes, berries, melons, roots and garden vegetables will be brought from the northwestern states, daily, for exhibition. In short, the exhibit comprises a general collection of all kinds of products to show the diversified resources of the seven great northwestern states traversed by the Northern Pacific railroad.

Visitors who intend to invest money in the northwest are reminded by attractive placards that the company still retains control of immense tracts of land in that territory, the exact figures being as follows: Minnesota, 1,200,000 acres; North Dakota, 6,850,000 acres; Montana, 17,300,000 acres; Idaho, 1,740,000 acres; Oregon, 300,000 acres; and Washington, 8,700,000 acres.

The two exhibit cars are marvels of the car builder's art. They are vestibuled; have large bay windows reaching from floor to roof; are decorated with ornamental woods from the forests along the Northern Pacific, and are in themselves an exhibit worthy of thoughtful inspection. The cars are placed on one of the tracks in the large annex to the Transportation building.

"WHY is it," she asked, "that stolen kisses are always the sweetest?" "I guess," he replied, "it is because they are taken sirup-titiously."—Boston Courier.

Devils Lake Chautauqua.

The first summer assembly of the North Dakota Chautauqua comes off June 28th to July 17th. An extensive program has been arranged, including many noted speakers, singers, etc., and the occasion promises to be most interesting and instructive. Devils Lake is a summer resort point. The Great Northern railway gives reduced rates. Address J. B. Fancher, Secretary, Devils Lake, N. D., for programme and other information. A trip to the lake and assembly will make an enjoyable outing.

Our Rapid, Transitory Existence,

Brief as it is at the longest, is liable to be materially curtailed by our own indiscretions. The dyspeptic eat what they should not, the bilious drink coffee in excess, and the rheumatic, neuralgic and consumptive sit in draughts, get wet feet and remain in damp clothes, and then wonder when ill how they became so. To persons with a tendency to neuralgia, we recommend a daily use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and especially after unavoidable exposure in damp or otherwise inclement weather.

To Puget Sound, June 18, 1893.

Beginning June 18th, the Great Northern runs through service on its new short line from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Seattle, Everett, Fairhaven, New Whatcom, Blaine and other Puget Sound cities. This route is 126 miles the shortest from the East to Pacific tide-waters. It opens up a territory offering fine inducements to investors and homeseekers. It is also an attractive route for tourists.

Visitors to the Twin Cities.

No one should visit the Twin Cities this summer without running out to Minnetonka Beach and Hotel Lafayette, the largest and best located resort house in the west. The lake is one of the most picturesque in the country, and is well supplied with steamers and sailing, rowing and fishing craft. A number of regattas will be given. The Great Northern has a double track line to the lake and runs frequent trains.

—A traveler on the Minneapolis road informs us that he met Charley Verse and Frank Brazie driving over to the Spring Park Sunday school picnic on Tuesday.

—Delano appears to be picking up some since the warm weather set in, considerable improvment in the appearance of the village is noticeable a many places.

—The change of time in the morning passenger to the cities over the G. N. to 6: A. M. is appreciated by our citizens who frequently have business to transact at those places.

—It is generally understood that the village fire apparatus is not in proper condition to be used to advantage in case fire should break out, and there is nothing to prevent our town going as did Fargo and several other places recently.

The old bird's habitation contains too much glass to longer continue to throw stones at us or at almost anybody else. Take a rest Old Bird. Take a rest.

A Literary Sensation.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" has certainly "broke loose"! The copyright on this most famous of American novels, by Mrs. Stowe, has recently expired, which frees its publication from the monopoly of the high priced publishers, and though in anticipation of this fact they have within a few months greatly reduced its price, now that it is really "unchained" the consequences are something surprising. John B. Alden, Publisher, of New York, issues several editions selling them only direct (not through agents or book sellers); one in good type, paper covers, for 5 cents, sent post-paid, or the same bound in cloth for 10 cents with postage 7 cents extra; also an excellent large type edition, on fine paper, handsomely bound in cloth for the price of 25 cents, postage 10 cents. Surely a copy of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" will soon be found in every home where it is not already. Mr. Alden sends a 33-page pamphlet describing many of his publications free, or a catalogue of 128 pages of choice books, a veritable "literary gold mine" for book-lovers, for 2 cents. Address JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, 57 Rose St., New York.

L. B. AVERY AND CARRIE E. MILLER, Conductors. F. H. LINDSLEY, 37-3t. Co. Superintendent.

A Large Drop in Rates to the West.

The Great Northern inaugurated its new train service to the Pacific Coast on the 1st inst. With sweeping reductions in rates, amounting to 40 per cent in many cases. The rate from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Puget Sound was reduced first-class from $60.00 to $35.00, to Spokane from $56.50 to $30.00, and to Helena and Butte from $40.00 to $25.00, with corresponding reductions on second-class tickets, both through rates applying proportionately to intermediate points. It is the purpose of the Great Northern to make rates to help the development of its territory. It is much the shortest line across the continent, was built on business principles, and at a cost about one half that of the older trans continental lines, and is, therefore prepared to do correspondingly well by its territory and patrons in rates and accomodations.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

We are having growing weather now. It seems nature is doing her best in way of show and display. The air seems fresh and invigorating. It comes ladened with sweet perfumes. Who is there can say within his heart, there is no God? Infidel France, centuries ago, had inscribed upon the gates of their cemeteries "Death is an eternal sleep." But what about it now. Religion and politics have their ups and downs.

Some say we are having fearful hard times; and all owing to a Democratic administration. The Egyptian plagues were as nothing in comparison. Are all these bank failures, and the present stringency of money, honest failures, etc., etc.; or, are not many of them for a selfish motive and aggrandizement? When money is in the hands of but a few, they can, in a measure control the monetary system at will.

Farmers are working roads and cultivating corn.

Crops of all kinds are looking well, notwithstanding the lateness of the season.

Mrs. W. W. Mills, of Minneapolis, has been visiting friends, in Independence, during the past week.

Picnics and excursions are now in order.

School will close in Dist. 102, in two weeks.

S. Brandon and wife, after a weeks visit in Independence, have returned to Minneapolis, where they expect to spend the summer.

Lake Sarah is now quite a rendezvous for fishing parties.

Book agents, insurance men and peddlers are thicker than Egyptian fleas. Every farmer should provide himself with a double barreled, reaction, selfadjusting shot gun, loaded with No. 1 shot, for argument. Gentlemen, I say you are too plenty; one every day in the week is too many.

Ben Drake now drives a fleet pony in a road cart.

It is reported that the landlord of the Cleveland House, Maple Plain, is to be married soon. At this writing we are unable to say who the lucky bride will be.

Independence has not been able as yet, to send a delegate to the World's Fair. No doubt hard times is partially the cause. But then the McKinley bill has not been repealed yet.

TIME:1900.

SCENE 1;—(8 Years old.)
No, daughter, I have made up my mind you can't have it, and that settles it.

SCENE 2;—(12 Year old.)
My daughter, your teacher's report shows you the poorest in all your classes. What is the matter?

SCENE 3;—(16 Years old)
So, daughter, you decline to go off to college, and prefer to work in some shop. I am astonished! Eight years ago you were the most ambitious girl in your class and they all sought after you as a companion but today they are in a higher grade of society than you—Some are going to college, some teaching and others married to intellectual men. But you seem to lose all interest in your brain in 1892, just because I would not get you the Encyclopedia Britannica which the TRIBUNE was offering its readers. You said others obtained it who were much poorer than we, and you were almost frantic to get to drop ten cents a day in the little bank. I supose you blame me for your ignorance, but, as I said then, if you would read your lessons over and over and know all that was in your school books you would do very well. But that was just before the "World's Fair," and you were always talking about something you wanted to look up in an Encyclopeada. It was "Columbus did this" and the "Spaniards that" and the "English the other," and the Lord only knows what you didn't wish you could read up on. Now, if you will just get up that same interest again I will get you the Britannica, though it will cost much more now than it did then. You don't want to read now? Well, then go look for a place to work. You have chosen your own course; I cannot help you.

MORAL:

Do The Right Thing At The Right TIME.

Read Our Remarkable Proposition;

And bear in mind that this Special Offer will remain open for a short time only.

After having examined many works of similar nature, I have purchased the Encyclopedia Britannica, being fully convinced that it is the most exhaustive and reliable of any encyclopedia on the market. It is a library in its self and no scholar can afford to be wihout it. The low figures and liberal terms made by the Minneapolis Tribune places this most valuable work with the reach of all. A set of these books should be placed in every school library in the state of Minnesota. No better investment could be made for the rising generation.

Very Respectfully,
F. H. LINDSLEY,
County Superintendent of Schools.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

A FOURTH OF JULY RECORD.

1 was a wide awake little boy,
Who rose with the break of day.

2 were the minutes he took to dress;
Then he was off and away.

3 were his leaps when he cleared the stairs,
Although they were steep and high.

4 was the number which caused his haste,
Because it was Fourth of July!

5 were the pennies which went to buy
A package of crackers red.

6 were the matches which touched them off,
And then—he was back in bed.

7 big plasters he had to wear
To cure his fractures sore.

8 were the visits the doctors made
Before he was whole once more,

9 were the dolorons days he spent
In sorrow and pain; but then—

0 are the seconds he'll stop to think
Before he does it again.

—Lilian Dyuevor Rice.

THE receiver, Charles E. Flandreau, offers the St. Paul Globe for sale. Let some good Democrat speak up.

THE prevailing opinion through the country, seems to be that if the John Sherman silver bill was repealed the money stringency would immediately relax.

SUCH accidents as occurred in Minneapolis on Monday, causing the death of two men, might be obviated by a little care, in placing the laborers on the ground, at some other part of the work than immediately under where big rocks are being placed in position, whether it be on the cornice or in some other part of the building.

IF a more quiet place for the holding of the State Medical Society meetings cannot be found in the cities than that provided at Minneapolis last week it would be advisable to find a place in some country town. It looked some as if the intention of someone was to have all the noise possible. The Lumber Exchange hall was, at the first meeting voted too noisy, and the next meeting was held in the ordinary at the West Hotel, where two men were kept bussily at work chiseling marble slabs near the door in the hallway. Delano has a good hall that would be a much more comfortable place.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie says: "The robber baron has ceased to rob, and is now being robbed. The eighth wonder of the world is this—two pounds of ironstone purchased on the shores of Lake Superior and transported to Pittsburg, two pounds of coal mined in Connellsville and manufactured into one and one-quarter pounds of coke and brought to Pittsburg, one-half pound of limestone mined east of the Alleghenies and brought to Pittsburg, a little manganese ore, mined in Virginia and brought to Pittsburg, and these four and one-half pounds of material manufactured into one pound of solid steel and sold for one cent."—Scientific American.

VIOLATIONS of the liquor laws of Minnesota subject the offender to fines, imprisonments and, in some instances, the revoking of the license. All officers before whom trials are had must report the cases to the authorities granting the licenses. It would be well for those who contemplate running beer stands on picnic grounds and away from their places of business, on the 4th of July to read the following extracts of laws:

SEC. 2. All licenses issued by the county commissioners, or by the authorities of any city, town, borough, village or other municipal corporation, for the sale of intoxicating liquors, shall contain a description of the premises and room where such liquors are licensed to be sold; and any person so licensed, who shall sell, barter or give away any intoxicating liquors outside of or in any place other than the room so named shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be liable to all the penalties provided in this act or under any law of this state for selling liquors without a license.

SEC. 4. Whoever sells, barters, gives away or otherwise disposes of any spirituous, vinous, fermented or malt liquors, without first having obtained license therefor agreeably to the laws of this state, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any court having jurisdiction of the same, be punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $100, together with the costs of prosecution, and by imprisonment in the county jail not less than thirty days nor more than ninety days. All prosecutions for the violation of any of the provisions of this section may be tried and conducted in a summary manner before any municipal court, police justice or justice of the peace having jurisdiction thereof in the same manner as violations of any municipal ordinance or by-law may now be tried and conducted. * * *

It would be well to get a copy of the 1887 laws and find out for yourselves what the penalties are, aside from those already mentioned.

MAYOR WRIGHT is said to have imitated Mayor Eustis, in suppressing a strike in St. Paul. What better could he have done? It showed wisdom in this instance.

SIX banks, in Minneapolis, have succumbed to the inevitable, and are likely to be numbered with the things that were. Considerable comment is being made on the fact that the papers record no failures in St. Paul.

ON Tuesday next, at dawn of day throughout the length and breadth of the United States, and, where ever is to be found a proud citizen of the "land of the free, and home of the brave," will the star-spangled banner, emblem of American liberty, be floated to the breezes. And the roar of cannon, musketry, and smaller arms, not forgetting the diminutive fire-cracker; the joy of every American boy, will proclaim to the world that this is the 4th of July. The anniversary of the Independence of our nation. That for 117 years we have kept our place among the nations of the earth and made rapid advancements, in many directions. That beginning with a few colonies along the rockbound Atlantic's shore, our forefathers resisted oppression, and once sniffing the air of freedom engaged in the great fight and won our nations liberty. That since then, through troublous times, through wars, and while gliding peacefully down the limpid stream of ages, each return of this day has called people to think of the price paid for what we now so freely enjoy. We have extended our country until we now claim, with Great Britain, that the sun never sets on our land. Let us each, and all, while assembled to celebrate the birthday of one of the greatest nations on earth determine, still more sedulously to guard the institutions of the United States, and preserve the free and equal rights of her citizens; advance civilization, and so live that when called to leave this our earthly home we may be fitted to be gathered to that country where all is peace and joy.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 23, 1893.

If there are any persons who believe the silly stories now going the round of the republican press, charging that President Cleveland and the other democratic leaders have abandoned all idea of making any radical changes in the tariff at the coming session of Congress, they would better begin to prepare themselves for a great disappointment. There has been no change in the programme mapped out by the democratic leaders before Mr. Cleveland was inauguated, except that caused by the financial stringency throughout the country, which has given financial reform the first place on the programme but has by no means displaced tariff reform. Ever since President Cleveland's election he has been discussing these two reforms with every man he met who might be supposed to have practical and valuable opinions upon either, and he has lost no opportunity to obtain suggestions from those whose practical experience or special studies have made them tariff experts. A perfect tariff bill has never been prepared and probably never will be, but unless present indications are all wrong the tariff bill to be prepared this winter will be nearer perfection, from the standpoint of the Chicago platform, than any of its predecesors, and that it will be a radical change from the McKinley law is as certain as that Congress will meet. Tariff reform and financial reform are to be the first born children of the 53 Congress, the first for more than thirty years to be democratic in both branches while a democrat was President.

President Cleveland has not and will not attempt to say what the details of the bill for the repeal of the Sherman silver law shall be. He is satisfied that the law is a very bad one and also that Congress will promptly repeal it at the extra session. He is also satisfied that it is perfectly safe to leave it to the wisdom of Congress as to how this shall be done and what other financial legislation shall be adopted in order to undo the bad effect of the Sherman law. In conversation with a friend this week he stated his belief that the partial polling of the members of the House and Senate by newspapers furnished no reliable basis to estimate what the vote on the question of repealing this law would be, owing to the large number of Senators and Representatives who have not declared how they will vote.

Every since Secretary Carlisle took charge of the Treasury department he has been quietly working to put a stop to the wholesale smuggling of Chinese and opium by way of Puget Sound. Reports from two trusted men sent to investigate soon convinced him that a number of the Government officials whose duty it was to prevent such smuggling were in league with the smugglers. He removed a number of these men and appointed their successors, but did not make either the removals or the appointments public until this week, because of his desire to secure the necessary evidence to criminally prosecute the crooked ex-officials. Large fortunes are said to have been made by the smugglers in the last ten years, but Mr. Carlisle intends to see that no more are made while he remains in office.

Not a few republicans, among them some congressmen, have openly commended Judge Lochren for his vigerous efforts towards carrying out President Cleveland's idea of making the pension roll a roll of honor, and the number is bound to increase as the good effect of the new methods become more apparent. The most audacious republican Congressman will hardly dare to go on record as criticizing the dresent administration for dropping men from the pension rolls whose names have no right, either in law or equity, to be there, and it is only that kind who are being dropped.

As was expected, Col. Ainsworth, the contractor, the superintendent, and the engineer, have been pronounced guilty of criminal negligence by the coroner's jury for having failed to take necessary precautions to prevent the accident which killed 23 men and wounded a number of others in Ford's old Theatre. They all gave bail to await the action of the grand jury. An army court of inquiry will as soon as the grand jury act's begin taking evidence upon which it will decide whether Col. Ainsworth shall be court-martialed or exonerated. He can only be deprived of his rank in the army by a court-martial.

Mrs. Cleveland and Baby Ruth have gone to Gray Gables, on Buzzard Bay, Ruth's birthplace, while the President remains here, notwithstanding the dancing among the nineties of the thermometer, up to his eyes in work so important that he cannot leave it. He hopes to get things in such shape that he can join the family in about ten days or two weeks and remain with them long enough to assist in welcoming the expected guest.

JOHN BURROUGHS, the naturalist, says that the bee does not "gather honey every day from every opening flower," but only sweetened water which the insect converts into honey. Just as, we suppose, the maple sugar man doesn't gather maple sirup from the maple tree, but takes a gill of sap and a quart of New Orleans molasses and mixes them for the grocery trade.

THE guileful confidence man does not hesitate to trifle with the most serious as well as the most sentimental affairs of life, if thereby he may turn a trick. His latest scheme is to play preacher, perform the marriage ceremony for a brace of confederates and induce only too willing men to sign the marriage certificate. In due time the certificate turns up as a promissory note in the hands of an innocent purchaser—and there you are.

A REMARKABLE character of Bernardston, Mass., is Arnold Scott, a blind letter carrier, 67 years old, whose eyesight was lost forty-six years ago. He has a long route, which he traverses twice a day, and rarely makes a mistake in the delivery of letters. He walks confidently in summer, but the snow troubles him somewhat in winter. Mr. Scott's knowledge of the neighborhood is said to be perfect, and he has never been known to get lost.

THE uses to which the banana is being put are varied and ever-increasing. It is a most nourishing fruit, and when dried and ground into meal forms a diet superior to any bread. Then the peeling that is thrown to the pavement, when stepped on, furnishes the severest test known to one's resolution to stop swearing. Now we are told that the fiber of the stalk is an excellent substitute for jute in the manufacture of wrapping paper. The banana will some day have a boom.

THE woman that took part in a late marriage at Newcastle, England, had a mathematical formula to guide her. At sixteen she married a man of thirty-two; at thirty she married again and chose a man of sixty. To conclude the series, she now, at forty-two, marries a man of eighty-four. Her first husband was a Quaker, the second a Catholic, and the present one a Protestant. If she lives much longer, and is determined to go on with her mathematical matrimonial venture, she will have to advertise in the want columns for a centenarian or two, and specify a new religion as one of her provisions.

THE government of New South Wales has been driven to the creation of paper money, and there are nearly four millions of current accounts locked up by the bank reconstructions. The business men are, therefore, at their wits' end, and hence the government offers to issue paper for the locked-up money to the extent of two millions, each customer receiving half his current account. By this plan, if successful, the government will get good interest for five years and then its money back; but if not successful the government is simply the largest deposit holder and shares the fate of the rest.

PRISON DOORS OPEN,

And Convicts Fielden, Schwab and Neebe Walk Forth Free Men.

Gov. Altgeld Issues a Pardon to the Noted Anarchists—A Lengthy Document Giving the Reasons for His Action.

BREATHE FREEDOM'S AIR ONCE MORE.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., June 27.—Gov. Altgeld on Monday issued an absolute pardon to Oscar Neebe, Michael Schwab and Samuel Fielden, who were convicted of complicity in the anarchist Haymarket riot in Chicago in May, 1886. The governor's statement accompanying the pardon contains 17,000 words.

The announcement of the pardons was made shortly after noon, but the papers were not filed with the secretary of state until 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The greatest secrecy was observed regarding the governor's proposed action, and even the newspaper men were kept in ignorance until the last minute. Even Banker Dreyer, of Chicago, who had been an active worker in the interest of the condemned men since their incarceration, and who had been notified to be here, did not know until he arrived here why he was sent for, and his surprise can well be imagined.

The action of the governor is variously criticised, being sharply condemned by many and by others as warmly indorsed. The lengthy and elaborate review of the case filed with the pardon shows that the governor has spent much time over the matter and that his decision was deliberate. The fight waged by the friends of the condemned men has been a long and determined one, and Govs. Oglesby and Fifer were besieged during their terms of office with constant appeals for their release.

The case is one of the most remarkable in the history of the government and has attracted the attention of the civilized world. On the night of May 4, 1886, a meeting was held in a hall in Haymarket square, Chicago, to protest regarding the killing of two laboring men in trouble which had taken place in an effort to introduce a rule for an eight-hour day for the laboring classes. The meeting was attended by about 1,000 persons, good order being maintained until just as the last were leaving the hall when a detachment of police were called in to quell a disturbance. As they approached the hall an unknown person threw a bomb into the crowd which killed several policemen and wounded many persons. A number of people were arrested and August Spies, Albert Parsons, Louis Lingg, Michael Schwab, Samuel Fielden, George Engle, Samuel Fischer and Oscar Neebe were indicted. Popular excitement was intense, the press, pulpit and public clamor demanded conviction, and after a long and bitterly contested trial the defendants were found guilty. Neebe received a fifteen years' sentence and the rest were to be hanged. The case went to the supreme court and was affirmed. Finally the sentence of Schwab and Fielden were commuted to life sentences. Lingg blew the top of his head off with a bomb in his cell and Parsons, Fischer, Engle and Spies were hanged. It was alleged at the time that conviction was due to public clamor, rather than to the evidence, and ever since there has been a strong element at work for the pardon of the condemned.

Following is a synopsis of the principal points in Gov. Altgeld's statement of 17,000 words giving his reasons for granting the pardon:

The governor reviews the history of the Haymarket meeting of May 4, 1886, in detail, and says the basis of the appeal for pardon was the petition signed by several thousand merchants, bankers, judges, lawyers and other prominent citizens of Chicago, which, assuming the prisoners to be guilty, stated the belief that the prisoners have been punished enough; but a number of them who have examined the case more carefully base their appeal on entirely different grounds and assert:

1. That the jury which tried the case was a packed jury selected to convict.

2. That according to the law as laid down by the supreme court, both prior to and again since the trial of this case the jurors, according to their own answers, were not competent jurors and the trial was therefore not a legal trial.

3. That the defendants were not proven to be guilty of the crime charged in the indictment.

4. That as to the defendant, Neebe, the state's attorney had declared at the close of the evidence that there was no case against him, and yet he has been kept in prison all these years.

5. That the trial judge was either so prejudiced against the defendants, or else so determined to win the applause of a certain class in the community that he could not and did not grant a fair trial.

The governor sustains the five points specified, and refers to the fact that a number of the jurymen declared candidly that they were so prejudiced that they could not try the case fairly, "but each when examined by the court," he observes, "was induced to say that he believed he could try the case fairly upon the evidence. Upon the whole," says the governor, "considering facts brought to light since the trial, Bailiff Ryce summoned a prejudiced jury, which he believed would hang the defendants." The governor asserts that Judge Gary knew of this but refused to take any action.

Quoting the recent decision in the Cronin case, the governor declares that it is difficult to see how, after a juror has avowed a fixed and settled opinion as to a prisoner's guilt, a court can be legally satisfied of the truth of his answer that he can render a fair and impartial verdict. The governor says that applying the rule laid down to the Cronin decision most of the jurors were incompetent because they were prejudiced and the mere fact that the judge succeeded by a "singularly suggestive examination" in getting them to state that they believed they could try the case fairly did not make them competent.

The pardon relates that the thrower of the bomb has never been discovered, nor anything to connect the prisoners with the throwing. The governor believes that the bomb was thrown by some one seeking personal revenge. He says that laboring men guilty of no offense had been shot down in cold blood by Pinkerton men and none of the murderers had been brought to justice; that in a number of cases the police, without any authority, have invaded and broken up peaceful meetings and clubbed people guilty of no offense whatever. In some cases certain police men under Capt. Bonfield indulged in brutalities never equaled before, and it was impossible for laboring people to get justice for these outrages. The governor believes the bomb throwing was the direct result of a feeling on the part of some one who had suffered at the hands of the police and had come to the conclusion that he could get satisfaction in no other way.

Speaking of Judge Gary, the trial judge, the governor says:

"It is further charged with much bitterness by those who speak for the prisoners that the record of the case shows that the judge conducted the trial with malicious ferocity and forced eight men to be tried together; that in cross-examining the state's witnesses he confined counsel for the defense to the specific points touched on by the state, and in the cross-examination of the defendants' witnesses he permitted the state's attorneys to go into all manner of subjects entirely foreign to the matters on which the witnesses were examined; also that every ruling throughout the long trial on any contested point was in favor of the state, and, further, that page after page of the record contains insinuating remarks of the judge, made in the hearing of the jury and with the evident intent of bringing the jury to his way of thinking; that these speeches, coming from the court, were much more damaging than any speeches from the state's attorney could possibly have been; that the state's attorney often took his cue from the judge's remarks; that the judge's magazine article recently published, although written nearly six years after the trial, is yet full of venom; that, pretending to simply review the case, he had to drag into his article a letter written by an excited woman to a newspaper after the trial was over, and which, therefore, had nothing whatever to do with the case and was put into the article simply to create a prejudice against the woman, as well as against the dead and the living and that, not content with this, he in the same article makes an insinuating attack on one of the lawyers for the defense, not for anything done at the trial, but because more than a year after the trial, when some of the defendants had been hung, he ventured to express a few kind, if erroneous, sentiments over the graves of his dead clients, whom he at least believed to be innocent. It is urged that such ferocity or subserviency is without a parallel in all history; that even Jeffries in England contented himself with hanging his victims, and did not stop to berate them after they were dead.

"These charges are of a personal character and while they seem to be sustained by the record of the trial and the papers before me and tend to show that the trial was not fair, I don't care to discuss this feature of the case any further, because it is not necessary. I am convinced that it is my duty to act in this case for the reasons already given, and therefore grant an absolute pardon to Samuel Fielden, Oscar Neebe and Michael Schwab this 26th day of June, 1893."

THEY'VE HAD ENOUGH.

Messrs. Fielden, Schwab and Neebe Promise to Refrain from Anarchistic Agitation in the Future—How They Received the News of Their Pardon.

CHICAGO, June 27.—Three men who for nearly six years have been known as Nos. 8,376, 8,526 and 8,527 emerged from the stone portal of the penitentiary at Joliet at 7 o'clock Monday evening and once more breathed the air of freedom. They were Oscar Neebe, Samuel Fielden and Michael Schwab, the anarchists who had been convicted of complicity in the Haymarket riot May 4, 1886, when seven policemen were killed by the explosion of a dynamite bomb. They owed their liberty to Gov. Altgeld's pardon.

E. S. Dreyer, the real-estate man and banker, who has interested himself in behalf of the men, arrived at the prison from Springfield at 3:15 c'clock in the afternoon with the pardons in his pocket, and also a copy of the governor's statement of his reasons for granting them. Mr. Dreyer was shown into the office of Warden Allen and presented his documents. The warden examined them, found them correct, and at once sent for the three convicts, who were convicts no longer.

Neebe, Schwab and Fielden entered the warden's office dressed in their prison stripes. They were stood up in line and in the presence of Warden Allen, Chaplain Roth, Clerk Miller and Storekeeper Allen Mr. Dreyer informed them that Gov. Altgeld had signed a pardon for each of them on certain conditions. Tears stood in the eyes of the men to whom this unexpected news of freedom came. Their emotion was apparent, though they made strong efforts to conceal it.

Mr. Dreyer made a short speech, in which he said executive clemeney was extended to them on condition that they promised to be hereafter honest, upright citizens, to go to work and earn a living, and forevermore to refrain from associating with men who preached the doctrines which had brought them within the prison walls, and to refrain themselves from again propagating anarchistic theories. He told them how they had been despised by the whole civilized world, and hoped that in view of the mercy that was shown them they would never give Gov. Altgeld nor himself cause to regret the action which set them free.

All three of the men unhesitatingly made the promise required of them. The warden then presented each with his pardon, which was the usual form in such cases, with the governor's signature attached. Gov. Atgeld's review of the case was not read on account of its length. Samuel Fielden, replying for himself and comrades, assured Mr. Dreyer that neither he nor Gov. Altgeld would be given cause to repent their course in the matter.

The liberated men then shook hands with Mr. Dreyer and were conducted back into the prison, where they took off their striped clothing and donned civilian suits. Then they were taken to the official dining-room where a dinner of roast beef, ham and eggs, strawberries and iced tea was served, Chaplain Roth, Clerk Miller, Mr. Dreyer, Mr. Allen, the warden's son, and the late prisoners being the guests. When the meal was finished it was nearly time for the train to arrive which was to bear the three liberated anarchists back to Chicago. As they came out into the balmy air of a perfect June evening one who had known them in former days would scarcely have recognized any one of them. Prison life had left its mark on each. Mr. Dreyer walked down to the station with the ex-prisoners, and in a few minutes a Santa Fe train came along and all boarded the smoking car.

The pardon was a complete surprise to all of them. The only one who had received an intimation of what was in store before being summoned to the warden's office was Schwab. Coming up in the train he said that at 3:30 o'clock the contractor in whose shop he was working, the book bindery, came to him and told him that he and the other anarchists had been pardoned.

"I could not believe it," he said. "We had been disappointed so often."

The men say they intend to keep the promise made to the governor to abstain from anarchistic agitation. Neither of them have formulated plans for the future.

The party left the train at Twenty-third street and boarding street cars went to their respective homes. Fielden to his wife and two children at 117 West Polk street, Schwab to his family, a wife and two children, at 167 Washtenaw avenue, and Neebe to his brother's residence on Sheffield avenue. Numerous friends called on them during the evening to offer their congratulations.

SIX KILLED OUTRIGHT.

Terrible Explosion of Molten Iron in a Saxony Foundry.

BERLIN, June 27.—A terrible and fatal accident occurred in Rohig's iron works at Magdeburg, Saxony. The workmen were making a heavy casting and were pouring the molten metal into the mold. Without a moment's warning there occurred a terrific explosion, the liquid iron flying in every direction and covering the workmen. Six men were killed outright, while seven others were so terribly burned that their recovery is despaired of. It is believed that the sand in the mold was dampened and that this caused the explosion.

Hundreds Die of Cholera.

LONDON, June 27.—A dispatch from Mecco states that there were 455 deaths from cholera in that city Sunday

MINNESOTA NEWS.

By a Dream.

The body of the riverman Leonard, who suicided by jumping from the steamer Daisy, was recovered a short distance below Winona as the result of a peculiar dream. Nelson Breed, who lives near the trestle, dreamed that he stood on the river bank watching a steamer coming down stream. When just opposite him he saw the wheel wash up an object, which he could plainly see was the body of a man. The dream so greatly impressed Mr. Breed that at daybreak the next morning he took his skiff and rowed up to the trestle, where he sighted a steamer coming down in exactly the same manner as in his dream, and when it approached he saw it was the same boat, the Remora. As it rounded the trestle, Breed rowed out and followed close to the wheel, impelled by a strange curiosity. He had not proceeded 10 rods when the wheel washed a dark and heavy object up against his skiff. He grasped it and towed it ashore, where he recognized it as the missing man Leonard, and notified the authorities.

Won the Strike.

There was a strike on the Lowry system of street railway in Minneapolis and St. Paul the 18th. It was of short duration, however, the employes gaining every point.

Several days ago the company presented a new form of contract for the employes to sign. After due consideration of the same, and seeking legal advice, the men concluded that the new form imposed obligations upon them that were unjust and unreasonable. Under it they thought they would be held responsible for damages that might occur to property and persons, no matter how much care was exercised. This the company denied. The men could not see it in the same light and after the last car was in on Saturday night a meeting was held. By unanimous consent the contract was refused and the men concluded to go out. Sunday morning not a street car could be seen. People either walked to church or stayed at home. Parties who had planned an outing at the lakes abandoned the idea.

Electrocuted.

Walter Weihe, a lineman in the employ of the Hartman Electric company at Duluth, met a horrible death by electrocution. After receiving the shock he fell backward from his perch upon a tall pole. His shoe or spur caught on one of the ladder spikes and hung him by the foot. He dangled there among the wires for several moments before being taken down. His fellow workmen became almost crazed. The remains were of a peculiar dull purple color and blood trickled from his shoulder. After being removed to the morgue it was found that his arm near the shoulder had been burned, and also his foot. His fellow workmen claim that he received but one shock. They say that when his shoulder touched a live wire the shock went through his body and out through his wet shoe into his iron spur and the wet pole.

He Escaped.

At East St. Cloud one Cooney, a bricklayer, stole $80 and some clothing from Quinlaven's hotel. Two boarders, Coyle and Stanley, caught him, gave him an unmerciful pounding, and he showed where the clothes were hid in the woods. Later the police were notified that he still had stolen property on his person. They followed and met Quinlaven bringing him in in a buggy. Quinlaven agreed to take him to town and be responsible for him. Nothing has been seen of him since. He had some money. Quinlaven says he fell out of the buggy.

Mistaken for a Burglar.

E. F. Searing, of Mankato, shot H. H. Myrum, supposing him to be a burglar. Myrum is keeping company with Mr. Searing's hired girl and had spent the evening with her. Suspecting she did not intend to retire after his leave-taking, he watched the house from 10 o'clock until 1:30, when he proceeded to shut the kitchen window, believing her to be outside, and thinking to play a joke on her; while doing so he made a noise, which resulted as above stated. Young Myrum received a painful wound, but not necessarily fatal. A 32-caliber bullet entered near the mouth and passed through the jaw and out near the ear.

Held to Bail.

O. O. Ostrum, of Elbow Lake, was brought before United States Commissioner Corliss, at Fergus Falls, on the charge of sending obscene matter through the mails. Ostrum was arrested for incest a while ago, and one of the witnesses against him was a Miss Paulson, a 15-year-old niece. Owing to a defect in the law, Ostrum could not be punished. He then wrote a very abusive and obscene letter to his niece. Commissioner Corliss held the prisoner under $500 bonds, and in default he was taken to the Ramsey county jail.

News in Brief.

E. L. Remmy, a painter, shot himself in Hawthorn park, Minneapolis, inflicting a severe, if not fatal wound, in the breast.

Wm. Fuller, a switchman in the yards of the St. Paul & Duluth railway at St. Paul, fell between the cars of a moving train and was so badly crushed that he died on the way to the hospital.

Workmen discovered the remains of Robert Ford, the 6-year-old son of Mrs. Mary Ford, burned in the Bunnell block fire at Duluth.

C. W. Colton, the horse thief, hailing from Eau Claire, was taken to Stillwater from Hastings by Deputy J. M. Wasser, having been sentenced to one year in the state prison.

Fire damaged the stock of the Duluth Dry Goods company from $2,000 to $8,000.

The body of Pete Francis was found in Lake St. Croix at Afton. It had been in the water a week.

A. Bassout, hardware and groceries, Ottawa, has assigned to H. E. Gibbon.

The thief who went through the Northern Pacific sleeper near Perham was caught at Frazee.

James R. Park, of Waverly, N. Y., fell through a skylight in the W. C. T. U. building in Minneapolis. His right hip was bruised and partially dislocated by falling on a radiator.

The Minnesota Iron company, operating the Chandler and Minnesota mines near Tower, has laid off 800 men. Depression in the iron market and no sales of ore are the causes. Both mines are running half force.

The State bank of Minneapolis has suspended payment.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—The late ex-President Hayes was the first man to receive the degree of LL.D., from Johns Hopkins University.

—Three new professorships have been established at Yale, one of them being a chair in Christian ethics, to which Rev. W. F. Blackman, of Ithica, N. Y., has been called.

—The truer view of religion, the only one that can stand the tests of deepening culture and experience, regards it not as the relief from life, but as its crown and completion.—Ecci Spiritus.

—At the opening meeting of the Yale corporation, it was stated that a new dormitory will be erected—the fourth to be announced within three months. This structure will cost $50,000 and will accommodate fifty students. The rent of some of the rooms will be as low as $2 per week.

—Rev. Joel Swartz, D. D., pastor of St. James' Lutheran church, Gettysburg, who has 700 widely scattered members in his congregation, thinks nothing of doing his ten miles on a bicycle in prosecuting his pastoral duties, though he is 70 years old. He has three sons in the ministry also.

—Rev. H. S. Thompson, pastor of a Methodist church at Felton, Del., having been disabled by illness, his daughter, a young woman, preached the sermon and conducted the morning services and his wife lectured in the evening. The ministrations of the ladies were well received by the congregation.

—Bishop William Taylor, the African missionary, after attending the World's missionary congress at Chicago, will visit his family in Alameda, Cal., and then go to Australia in pursuance of a promise made to his old friends in that country 25 years ago that he would come and visit them in 1893 if he were then living.

—More that $70,000 of the funds of the Cincinnati university is missing. At a meeting of the university trustees, Dr. C. A. Leed, in looking over an old ledger, found a discrepancy of upward of $40,000, which he said had been paid to the sinking fund trustees, for which no credit had been given to the university board. Further investigation showed that $30,000 more, which should have been paid in on tax account, was also gone.

—Bishop H. L. Turner, of the African M. E. church, the leading advocate of returning the black man to Africa, is on a visit to this country. He says: "Liberia is not making the progress that I could wish. It needs new blood, and that blood ought to go from this country, for the reason that European nations have parceled out Africa from north to south among them, and Liberia is the only place on the face of the globe left for the black man to build up for himself a civilized and enlightened state, and demonstrate to the world his ability for self-government. I believe he has it. In the United States he has no future except as a menial."

Seems to Fit.

"I call this new shape the Telephone," said a hat dealer to a customer.

"Isn't that rather an odd name for a hat?"

"Perhaps, but you see there is so much talking done through hats now."—Detroit Free Press.

"German Syrup"

My niece, Emeline Hawley, was, taken with spitting blood, and she became very much alarmed, fearing that dreaded disease, Consumption. She tried nearly all kinds of medicine but nothing did her any good. Finally she took German Syrup and she told me it did her more good than anything she ever tried. 77 YEARS OLD

I am seventy-seven years old, and have had my age renewed at least twenty years by the use of Swift's Specific. My foot and leg to my knee was a running sore for two years, and physicians said it could not be cured. After taking fifteen small bottles S. S. YOUNG AMERICA'S FOURTH.

WE put him to bed in his little night-gown,
The worst battered youngster there was in the town;
Yet he yelled as he opened his only well eye:
"'Rah! Rah for the jolly old Fourth of July!"

Two thumbs and eight fingers with cloths were tied up,
On his head was a bump, like an upside-down cup:
And he smiled as he best could with nose all awry:
"I've had just the bossest Fourth of July!"

We were glad, for he had been up with the sun,
Right into the midst of the powder and fun,
Where the cannon's loud boom sent its smoke to the sky,
Young-America-like was his Fourth of July.

I said we were glad. All the pieces were there,
So we plastered and bound them with tenderest care;
But out of the wreck came the words with a sigh:
"If to-morrer was only the Fourth of July!"

He will grow all together again, never fear,
And be ready to celebrate freedom next year;
But though it is selfish we're thankful there lies
A crackerless twelvemonth twixt Fourth of Julys.

We kissed him good night on his powder-specked face,
We laid his bruised hands softly down in their place;
And he murmured, as sleep closed his one open eye:
"I wish every day was the Fourth of July!"

Huldy's Independence.

"WAL, I be agoin' to drive to Pine brook this mornin', sir. Would you keer to come along?"

Dea Stone's stout little horse and roomy carriage stood before the farmhouse gate, and as he addressed me Mrs. Stone appeared in the low doorway and, her round face beaming good-naturedly, declared that a ride, as the morning was so fine, "would do you jest a power o' good." I needed very little urging, and was soon comfortably seated by my genial host, driving swiftly along the woody road.

How delightful to a weary, broken-down man is the fresh, fair country! Already I felt at home with these folk, though the week had not yet passed since I came among them in obedience to the doctor's peremptory command. Careful nursing, good food, and, best of all, the warm, personal interest that the deacon and his wife took in my well-being, had "set me up wonderfully," as the saying goes. Sweet with the breath of summer, warm winds swept past us over waving meadows and sunny hillsides, thrushes fluted from the heart of distant trees, and farmhouses here and there gleamed whitely in the sunshine as we flew past them and followed the old road, winding—

As old roads will,
Here to a farmhouse
And there to a mill,

till suddenly, at the turning of a wayside lane, the deacon drew rain, and waited for the woman and little child coming along it, a look of pleasure lighting up his honest, gray eyes.

"Hullo, Huldy!" he shouted, cheerily, "how air ye? Amos, too, is gittin' putty spry, ain't he?"

Her laughing reply came back to us, and picking up the child, a boy of some two or three summers, she came forward to shake hands with the deacon, and I was accordingly presented to "Mis' Cones."

Such a pretty picture of womanhood! A supple, young figure, in close-fitting, blue cotton dress, with a snowy kerchief clasping the firm, white throat, and the soft light falling faintly through those close, green leaves upon the masses of gold-brown hair that crowned her well poised head, and the little curls straying idly across her broad, low brow. One arm was thrown about the little chap, who nestled close to her rounded chin, his yellow curls stirred slightly by the breezes and a rosy thumb in his wee mouth. How her dark eyes lighted up and the sensitive lips smiled on him, as with the look of a shy bird, safe on his mother's tender breast, he watched us.

"Ef Jeff wants to see the fines' thing out yit, he had better jist pack you an' mar, an' Amos, enter that new kerridge of his'n an' drive over to my place. I got the fines' mowin' machine fer miles roun', Huldy, en' mind ye don't furgit to tell him," the deacon said to her. Smilingly she promised, when the deacon interrupted her. "You ain't one to furgit the road to Stone's farm, air ye, Huldy?" he questioned, in evidently such a teasing manner that the rich red flooded royally her round, smooth cheeks.

"No," and she looked up frankly at him. "You were always our best friend in those days, deacon," she answered with such sweet simplicity that the old man's face grew bright with pleasure as he watched her.

"Wal, wal, ye know I allus did have an awful soft sort of a spot in my old heart for the gals," and he laughed in a satisfied manner. Then after a few inquiries regarding "the folks," on both sides, and the hope expressed that she would be "over to Mendham for the exercises to-morrow," with a good-natured pinch of the shy baby's cheek, and a hearty shake of his mother's slim, young hand, the deacon chirruped briskly to his horse, and once more we started on our journey.

Looking back as we climbed the steep hill, we saw a group of three, where two had been. A stalwart young man, with the baby on his shoulder, and the pretty, young wife laughing beside him, as they went along the roadside.

"Yes, Jeff's a good fellow. That air was a terrible rough courtship, though, I kin tell ye," and the deacon shook his head thoughtfully. "That's where Todd Cross, her pa, lives," pointing with his whip to an outlying farmhouse. "'Twas his way of actin' that made things so hard for the girl," he added by way of explanation.

And seeing that I was interested, as we went up hill and down dale to the little village, he told me the story.

"Wal, ye see 'twas jest this way. From the time this here Pineville was started, an' till some five years gone, the Coneses and the Crosses was jest thicker 'n peas in a pod! Ef ther was a dunation pa'ty (fer the dominie, yer know), Mis' Cross an' Mis' Cones was side by side on the committee, an' ther husbands fetchin' up the end. Mis' Cross was pie, Mis' Cones cake; Mr. Cross apples, Mr. Cones pertaters; that was the way the bill of fare run. As to church, they was all Methodists, an' the Crosses allus set jest back of the amen seats on the right—likewise the Cones jest back of the prerbation seats on the left. An' Mis' Cross sung high serpranny, an' Mis' Cones low alter—likewise Mr. Cross light tenner, Mr. Cones deep bass. The same set o' feelin's run through all the children—as was nateral. When they was reel young they jined times in havin' the whoopin' cough an' measles, then come brunchetus, an' dumb aggie, they'd even hed this here 'malary,' I suppose, ef ther hed been enuff doctors then ter set round in a hall, an' name things. Wall, bimeby they come through those diseases by dosin' with good yarbs, and keerful nursin'. None of 'em ever died, as I never heerd tell o.

"And then (and here the deacon's old eyes twinkled) they growed up pretty even an' took to fallin' in love with each other jest as nateral as spring plantin'!

"Bill Cross he took Miry Cones. Ned Cones he took Mandy Cross, Bijah Cross he took Pheby Cones, Zeb Cones he took Viny Cross, that's the way all on 'em went it, spring an' fall, jest like clockwork, with Dominie Mickens tyin' the knots, an' weddin' tewers ter Bostin an' Niagry, Bostin an' Niagry, with never a break anywheres till on'y Huldy on the Cross side and Jeff on the Cones side was left.

"Wal, even now I don't think ther'd have been any trouble ef it had'nt er been fer Melissy Hokum. I don't never like to say nuthin' gen wimen folks, knowin' the wuth of 'em, but Geewhittaker! that ther one woman was a hull team by herself! She lived ter Comford fer a spell, an' then some evil spirit put the idee in her head ter jine the Pineville folks. An' down she come upon us, draggin' Si. Wal, he was the kind of feller that ye'd git weak in the knees jest ter think onto. T'want jest alone his humliness, for that nobody kin help, but 'twas his tarnation conceit an' the fool ways of him. Ugh!" and the deacon shrugged his shoulders vigorously.

"Wal, Melissy an' her brother took the Homes yaller cottage on the cross road, and went to housekeepin'. Givin' out Si was goin' to be a hoss doctor. Wal, first the wimen folks got acquainted with her, an' then she come visitin' in her turn, an' next Si took ter hangin' round barns ter see cattle, an' so things went on. Mariar an' me never liked either on 'em, for that matter, though some folks did.

"Wal, as was nateral, the time come round for Huldy and Jeff ter follow the others' example, an' we was jest noticin' (Mariar an' me) that Huldy was gittin terribul hard to suit in the way of bonnets (changin' 'em often, 'specially Sundays), an' Jeff's collars was risin' higher an' higher, an' the posy button-hole bookays was sot in terribul pertickler. These signs was goin' on, I say, when ther come a rumpus that putty nigh busted up Pineville—houses, farms, cattel, people an' all.

"It seems Tod Cross (Huldy's pa) bought a bay mare off'n Ike Cones (Jeff's pa), and give him a fine heifer for't. An' ther very next day after the exchange that bay mare tore round fearful in the lot, an' then give a few quivers an' died. Wal, of course, Tod was considerable sot back over it, an' Melissy hearin' the news sends down Si for a pose mortime over the critter. An' they hed it in Cross' barn, an' next 'twas give out that the mare was ailin' before Ike sold her. An' Ike got mad an' swore thet he didn't know it, an' Si and Melissy, fer pure spite, I s'pose, kep' throwin' out hints that he did. 'Tenny rate, the matter went on getherin' till Top and Ike come ter blows at Piper's store, an' quit speakin' and o' course ther families took it up. But wives can't stand out 'g'in ther husbands, ye know, likewise husbands 'g'in wives, so the young families patched it up 'mong 'em, but I tell you the old Cross and Cones families stood it out.

"Tod Cross took to goin' to ther Baptist church, an' ferbid Jeff's comin' ter see Huldy. 'Twas a terribul pity, you see, sech doin's—'cause a love affair sot goin' rightly can't stop fer nothin', least of all the dyin' of a hoss critter! Wal, Huldy bein' a dutiful gal, an' used ter mindin', give up lettin' Jeff bring her home from meetin' an' spellin' bees, an' sich, an' took to stayin' home staid o' visitin' round, sech as young folks should, an' bimeby we heerd that Jeff hed gone west

"Wal, I hed gotten enter the way of droppin' in'o Cross's, when I come past there, 'count o' Huldy (knowin' her when a leetle mite of a gal) an' I wa'n't goin' ter let anuther man's fight stop it off, neither. So one day as Tod an' me set on the stone wall talkin' and hevin' a smoke, I see Huldy come out ter feed her chickens. 'Here's a good chance,' says I to myself, an' then I up and spoke. 'Tod,' says I, mild like, 'that leetle gal o' your'n ain't the Huldy as I knowed on.' He gave a start and looked sharp me. 'What's the matter of her?' says he. 'Jes' look at her, Tod,' says I, 'an' see fer yerself.' And then Huldy havin' fed the chickens jes' as we looked up was standin' still as a statter, lookin' out over the hills. Phew! jest makes my eyes water now when I think onto it! Seemed 'sif the sunshine that was makin' her hair so gold like hed drawed all the red from those white cheeks, an' put big shadows under them great brown eyes, allus so gentle an' appealin' lookin', an' there was a droopin' look to that pretty red mouth, as she stood with her hands clasped, gazin' straight before her, that made my old heart ache ter see.

"Wal, Tod, he looked with me, but didn't say nothing, an' presently Huldy turns and goes inter the house again. Then we smokes awhile longer, an' bimeby he says: 'Gals is often apt ter get piney like, real piney, but they get all right after a spell. Oh, jest all right.'

"'Tod Cross,' says I, gittin' up off thet stun wall, real mad, 'ye air makin' believe fool yerself. All thet dear gal wants is jest Jeff Cones, an' not a livin' soul else, an' ye know it jest as well as I do!' an' with that I clum down, got on the wagon, an' druv off. I tell ye I was mad ter see that pretty creetur look so!

"Wal, 'twas that very same week, I guess, that Huldy come down ter help Mariar on the bedspread she was makin', an' they got ter talkin' (as wimen folks will, ye know,) an' Mariar said, sudden-like: 'I wonder where on airth Jeff Cones be ter, anyway? I'm jest a pinin' fer a sight of him, allus bein' fond of the boy. And Hiram [that's me] has allus sot gre't store by him!' Mariar said while she kep' talkin' she was watchin' Huldy out of the corner of her eye, an' really she hadn't the heart to go on further then, fer she see the big, slow tears a-droppin' one by one, an' the girl tryin' to thread her needle with fingers all tremblin'. An' jest then, as they sot there in our kitchen, there come a rap at the door and Mariar jumps up, while Huldy turns her back an' wipes her eyes quick on the bedspread, an', brown, thin an' weary-lookin',—who should walk in but Jeff Cones!

"Wal, Mariar said she was beat out then, an' couldn't do nothin' but jest stand still an' watch 'em. For Jeff give one look at Huldy, sittin' stone still in her chair, an' the tearstains on her face, an' them poor little hands lyin' on her lap, and then, with suthin' of a great chokin' sob, at one bound he was across the room an' had her in his arms.

"When I came in a leetle while after, there was Mariar cryin' her eyes out on the doorstep for jest pure joy. Geewhittaker! but it seemed as if a stun hed rooled off'n me when I heard that news!

"Both on 'em stayed to supper, an' Mariar give 'em a royal spread, I can tell yer! An' I never see a puttier sight. 'Twas June, ye know, with a big yaller moon jest fillin' the airth with light, an' as I druv Huldy home, the cool, sweet smell of the woods, an' the grass, an' the flowers, kep' floatin' by us. My, how my heart warmed up to hear the gal singin' soft to herself as we went along! I thought on't a good deal, sittin' there beside her. I hadn't ailus been married myself, an' I'd hed some hard spells ter git Mariar. Then I did some tall reasonin' on the Bible lines. Ye know they air putty strong, sir—putty strong on that pint. Evidently Jeff was a-goin' ter 'cleve unto' Huldy, an' she ter Jeff. An' straight up an' down that night I made my mind up!

"'Huldy, my dear,' says I, as I let her down by the front gate, 'Huldy, my dear,' says I, 'ye may tell Jeff from me that he is welcome to the seat under my apple trees when the weather's good, and our settin' room when it ain't.' An' then I druv off fast without stoppin'.

"Wal, Mariar bein' one with me, since Dominie Waddums married us, (three and thirty years ago come next September), allus upholds me, consequently two old folks by the name of Stun got used to seein' two young folks makin' pretty good use of their big orchards. For Tod still holdin' out 'gainst Jeff, Huldy hed made up her mind to marry him outright the next month. Wal, 'twas a real brave, quiet-lookin' gal an' a tall, han'some, smilin' young man thet told us good-by the first day of July. No weddin' finery on them, fer a strange minister in the next town was to marry 'em. An' Mariar cried an' laughed ter onct as she held Huldy close. We watched 'em drive off, an' long the road till they crossed the bridge to Bornton. Geewhittaker! but I was glad when Tod Cross knowed it! Ye see, I hed promised 'em ter do the tellin' that night. An' I did. Wal, it's fair an' square now between us, o' course, but I never see a man in such a tearin' rage 'fore nor sence. He took to his bed, an' Mis' Cross, who was allus a good deal on Huldy's side, jest hed a time, an' no mistaken, for the next three days.

"Wal, we Pineville folks hev allus thought a good deal on the Fourth, bein' very patriotic, an' j'ined with the Mendham folks in hevin' exercises in their Methodist church. Equal number of speakers from each place holdin' forth. Wal, Tod, he were 'p'inted on the list thet year, an' bein' a little mite sot up over it, decided ter keep on with the prergram, Huldy or no Huldy. Wal, the Fourth come, an' everybody also; leastwise all thet could come. An' we hed hed three speakers, an' the 'Star-Spangled Banner,' when Tod's turn came. I'll show ye the place termorrer where he stood.

"'Feller-citizens' was got through with, an' 'I stand before ye,' an' we was sittin' there waitin' for the rest, when suddenly there come a regler uproar, shoutin, stampin', tossin' up hats, an' cheers. An' there, sweet as the roses in her white gown, with cheeks to match 'em underneath her white bunnet, holdin' tight to her husband's arm, little smiles cuttin' capers round her mouth, stood Mis' Jefferson Cones!

"When he see 'em Tod Cross jest sot right down on the fust cheer handy, an' mopped his forehead, an' turned whiter an the dress Huldy hed on.

"When she see him lookin' like thet, Huldy give one cry an' runs right up to him.

"'Oh, father,' she says, throwin' both arms round his neck and kissin' him. 'Oh, father, ain't you and mother goin' to forgive me?' and then she bust out cryin' an' so did most of the wimen folks.

"An' 'twas jest at this point thet old Dominie Mickens got up an' said as how ter his mind Huldy's gittin' married in this style was a regler good old-fashioned Declaration of Independence, an' all on us bein' American citizens, we hed a right ter bide it. 'Specially on the Fourth of July.

"Wal, that sot 'em all ter laughin', 'count o' ther dominie's funny way of talkin'. An' when we saw Tod Cross an' Jeff Cones shakin' hands, an' then Ike Cones an' everybody crowdin' roun' an' laughin', an' talkin', an' kissin' Huldy, an' shakin' Jeff's hands, an' everything peaceful an' happy—we knowed the quarrel was ended forever," said Dea Stone, cheerfully, "owin' to Huldy's independence!"—Grace Virginia Halsey, in Springfield Republican.

A WORD TO GIRLS.

How to Celebrate the Nation's Birthday in a Real and Patriotic Way.

Yes, "the Fourth" is noisy, and it is apt to be uncomfortably warm. I agree with you in wishing that our nation's birthday had fallen in another season of the year.

Still, girls, let us be patriotic enough to celebrate the day in spite of every drawback!

You don't fancy torpedoes, and firecrackers, and "chasers," and pin wheels and "punk?"

You hate "double-headed Dutchmen," and Roman candles, and sky rockets?

You dislike the perspiring, noisy crowds on boats and cars? You would rather stay at home than go to hear the best Fourth of July oration ever written?

Well, stay at home, an' it so please you, my dears, but in some way—if only a quiet one—keep the Fourth!

Why?

Because it is the Fourth's mission to feed our love of country, and we need to keep that love burning brightly and steadily in our hearts.

Read up in your histories about what took place in the old state house at Philadelphia one hundred and seventeen years ago.

Read the story of how the "Star Spangled Banner" came to be written, and then sing the song with all your might and main. (Never mind if you haven't any voice; sing without a voice!)

Learn by heart the speech that the great Lincoln made at Gettysburg when he called our republic "a government of the people, by the people, for the people."

So you can keep "the glorious Fourth," though without stirring one step away from home, and so shall its mission to you really be fulfilled.—M. D. Sterling, in Good Housekeeping.

SHE OBEYED ORDERS.

Bridget, the new girl, has been told to toast the crackers.

The Small Boy's Fourth.

He singed his eyebrows and his nose,
This hero of my rhyme,
Blew off a finger and two toes,
A sisser spoiled his brand-new clothes,
The punk destroyed his striped hose,
And yet, in spite of all his woes,
He had a bully time.

SMALLPOX IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Disbelief in and Opposition to Vaccination Manifested by Influential People.

About twenty years ago there was a severe epidemic of smallpox in England and America. In recent months the disease has been causing alarm in many parts of England and Scotland. Up to the middle of January it was prevailing—though in general the cases are of a mild type—in about fifty localities, including Liverpool, Manchester, Edinburgh and Glasgow. In the last city thirty-four new cases occurred within ten days previous to the report. The story is a serious one at this especial season of the year. No newly improvised hospitals can be expected to stay the spread of the disease. England contends with the pest at a disadvantage. Many persons of influence do not believe in vaccination, write against it and oppose it in every way they can. The opposition has grown greatly during the long absence of the epidemic. The vaccination laws are practically in suspense. In some districts many children have never been vaccinated. Even where the letter of the law has been complied with vaccination has been done in a very lax and untrustworthy way, and there has been an almost entire absence of revaccination. Again, the large class of tramps and the many filthy lodging houses into which they crowd at night greatly aid in the spread of the disease. At Manchester a man was found suffering from smallpox at a large lodging house. The inspector made arrangements for his removal, but as soon as the officer's back was turned the patient bolted from the house, and when he was captured some hours later he was believed to have infected a considerable number of his fellows. If the epidemic reaches this country, we shall not expect it to spread very extensively, for the laws respecting vaccination are intelligently carried out. Still, the large immigrant population will need looking after and lodging houses will need rigid inspection. Revaccination should be properly attended to. The authorities also should promptly provide means for the isolation of patients.

The Madstone Superstition.

"Here's something that will interest you," said a physician as he placed a lump of slaty-looking stone in the hands of a New York Sun scribe. "A patient of mine gave me that this morning with as grand an air as if she were giving me a silver dinner service. No doubt she thought it had a great value. It's a madstone. You've read accounts of them. Put them on a dog bite and they will suck it and give off green froth, and all that sort of rubbish. There is no such a thing as a madstone in the world. Touch the stone to your tongue. Notice anything? Sticks, doesn't it? That is because it is anhydrous. It has gone through a slight chemical change and has lost part of the water that was in its original composition, so that it readily absorbs moisture. It will stick to a cut or a bite or anything else that is wet, and that is all there is to it. But it's a harmless sort of superstition, and if it makes any poor devil comfortable, for goodness' sake let him believe in it."

Removing a Source of Peril.

Danger is near when the kidneys grow inactive. The source of peril is removable with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which unquestionably averts Bright's disease, diabetes, gravel and other ruinous maladies attributable, in the first instance, to a dormant condition of the kidneys and bladder. A healthful impulse to the performance of the functions of these organs is speedily communicated by the Bitters, which likewise removes constipation, malaria, liver trouble and dyspepsia.

MAKES ITSELF FELT

—the great, griping, old-fashioned pill. Not only when you take it, but unpleasant, from first to last, and it only gives you a little temporary good.

The things to take its place are Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. One of these at a dose will regulate the whole system perfectly. They're tiny, sugar-coated granules, scarcely larger than mustard seeds. They act in Nature's own way. No reaction afterward. Their help lasts and they do permanent good. Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, Sick or Bilious Headaches, and all derangements of the liver, stomach, and bowels are prevented, relieved, and cured.

They're the cheapest, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction or money is returned. Nothing can be "just as good."

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

—the names of most so-called washing compounds. And it isn't an accident, either. It's to make them sound something like Pearline. That is the original washing compound—the first and in every way the best. These imitations are thus named in the hope of confusing you—in the hope that you'll mistake them for Pearline. For most people, that ought to be enough. It ought to convince them that the article so imitated, so copied, so looked-up to, is the one that is the best to use. If your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back—demand Pearline. 382 JAMES PYLE, New York.

—Miss Tillie Eppel acting Post Mistress at this place is giving good satisfaction while the appointee of the ex-president is accumulating wealth by gathering in the salary in addition to his insurance business which is absorbing about his undivided attention.

—S. D. Barnett, the Encyclopedia Britannica man unconsiously perpetrated a huge joke, upon a young man from the country last Sunday very much to the amusement of several parties present who took in the situation. The young man from the country hitched his horse and buggy, all polished up in fine style in front of the inn, while he sat down and entered into a general conversation with the guests. The Encyclopedia man thinking he had caught a customer invited him into the hall to examine his books, and poured his persuasive eloquence into the y. m. f. the C's ear so continuously that he did not note the time, and, after a large portion of an hour had elapsed, and he bad awakened from his reverie, and made up his mind to give the e. m. a decisive answer, the y. m. f. the c. took the landlord aside and very confidentially enquired if a certain young lady was in the house. "Why, she left half an hour ago" was the unwelcome answer. "Which way did she go." "West." was answered. And the y. m. f. the c. hastily took his departure in search of the object of his visit.

The teachers training school will be opened at Buffalo, on the 19th of July. These schools are kept up at the state's expense, and should be well patronized by teachers. Here the latest improved methods are learned. The rusty spots are polished and a teacher returns to his work much better fitted for his duties. Let every teacher in Wright county be on hand promptly and regularly during the term.

The Tribune a new Alliance paper of Faribault, says in summing up a denoucement of Donnelly and Fish in language as follows: "There can be no hope for any progress in any moyement, when the leaders, who have been entrusted with the power to manipulate the destiny of a party are of such pugnacious character. There is only one thing and one thing alone for the Alliance to do. Recall Hall and reorganize. Put Eckford and his insurance business out of the ranks."

Last week's Gazette says that the plates made in St. Paul from which the Eagle is printed cost 25 cents a column. The Gazette overestimates it, the cost is only $1.20 for a whole page.—Buffalo Journal.

We accept the Journal's amendment. We have never purchased any ourselves; but simply judged from advertisements we have received. Perhaps that suitable for the "poor old bird" comes cheaper.

Disposition of Court cases was made at Buffalo, as follows:

Louis Hallett was sentenced to the State Reformatory, at St. Cloud.

State of Minnesota vs. John Olsen and Martin Peterson. Jury disagreed.

State vs. Edward Ekstrom & Elof Holmberg, Jury found Holmberg not guilty, but Ekstrom guilty as charged in the indictment. Ekstrom was sentenced to pay a fine of $75.00 and costs of $99.90 and imprisonment for 30 days. These were "blind pig" cases.

Other similar cases were put over till next term.

Isaac Granger vs. Godfrey Granger. Title to land; held good.

W. H. Vye vs. Hans Nelson et al. Judgment for defendent.

Geo. A. Mason vs, John Maurer, two appeal cases; judgment of lower court affirmed.

O. H. Harvey vs. August Fells. Verdict for plaintiff, set aside and new trial granted.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Every thing is almost burning up for want of rain, and unless we get a refreshing shower, soon our wheat and oat crops will be short, and in fact, all growing crops will suffer more or less.

People should acquaint themselves with hard times, for we fear the worst has not come yet.

Most of the Independence people will celebrate the forth of July at Delano, and Rockford, perhaps some of them may take in the big circus at Minneapolis.

Freeman Styner is building himself a new house just west of Armstrong, on South side of the railroad track. E. W. Mills is doing the carpenter work.

Mrs. E. Richards of Buffalo, is visiting with friends in Independence.

On Tuesday of this week the town board had quite an interesting meeting. The underpinning of the Town Hall at Armstrong was let to O. Styner, for $34.75. Some others put in bids for the job, Styner being the lowest bidder got it.

Drowned in Big Lake.

Monticello, Minn, special, June 24.—Ed Everett, a young man about twenty five years, and a boy named Peters, fourteen years, were drowned last night in Big Lake three miles from here. Both were drunk. They were returing from Becker some time in the night and probably drove their horse into the lake for a drink as the water suddenly grows very deep got beyond their depth before they realized it. The buggy and horse were found in the lake this morning while the body of Everett was recovered about noon, while that of young Peters has not yet been found. —Pioneer Press.
